Mot.	Titan's Memorandum of Points and Authorities in Support of its Motion to Dismiss

1 As Titan set forth in its opening brief, these citizens of a foreign country, detained by the 2 U.S. military during a time of war, in a theater of combat, cannot bring a civil claim in U.S. courts
3 for their alleged mistreatment during their detention. Whether denominated as the military 4 contractor defense, a “special factor,” or the political question doctrine, it is clear that as a matter 5 of federal law and separation of powers, civil claims against the U.S. military’s contractors for 6 their alleged conduct in the military’s detention centers in an active war zone are not allowed.
7 Binding precedent in this Circuit makes this clear, as does the Supreme Court precedent and 8 every court to have addressed claims such as the ones presented here. In addition to this absolute 9 bar to plaintiffs’ claims, there are multiple other grounds on which their claims must be 10 dismissed, either for failure to plead the key facts necessary to make a claim against Titan for the 11 acts of its employees or others, or because of fundamental legal flaws, such as the lack of a 12 private right of action, or that the statutes they invoke do not have extraterritorial reach.

13 In response, plaintiffs attempt to recast their pleadings to deemphasize the involvement of 14 the government, selectively quote sentence fragments from adverse opinions to advance them for 15 propositions contrary to their holdings (or quote dissents as holdings without indicating as much), 16 and simply make assertions about the law without case support. Even if plaintiffs were allowed 17 to disavow their pleadings in response to a motion to dismiss (and they are not), plaintiffs cannot 18 have it both ways. If government officials were acting in their individual capacities in Iraq (an 19 impossible assertion given plaintiffs’ filings which are taken as true at this stage), then the alleged 20 Titan employees (and remember the only identified Titan employees are not alleged to have acted 21 against any of the plaintiffs in this case; plaintiffs cannot say whether they were harmed by Titan 22 employees) were acting beyond the scope of their employment and Titan cannot be held liable.

23 Below, we address the main arguments advanced by plaintiffs, whether in response to 24 Titan’s or CACI’s motion to dismiss. A careful look at what they write makes clear that even if it 25 were not for the absolute bar of the circumstances of the alleged torts, plaintiffs have 26 fundamentally failed to plead their claims against Titan, and their complaint must be dismissed.

1 I. Plaintiffs' Common Law Claims Must Be Dismissed

2 A. Koohi Requires Dismissal of Plaintiffs' Tort Claims

3 In its opening brief, Titan demonstrated that controlling Ninth Circuit precedent requires 4 dismissal of plaintiffs' state and federal tort claims, which are based on their treatment in the 5 military's custody in a war zone, because such claims conflict with the federal interest expressed 6 by, among other things, the combatant activities exception to the FTCA. Koohi v. United States, 7 976 F.2d 1328 (9th Cir. 1992). Plaintiffs do not contend that Koohi has been overruled or called 8 into question; to the contrary, in discussing the political question doctrine, plaintiffs correctly 9 refer to Koohi as controlling precedent. (C. Opp. 10.¹) Plaintiffs also do not dispute that their tort 10 claims arose during a time of war in a theater of active combat and directly implicate the unique 11 federal interest in warmaking. Instead, plaintiffs devote a mere three sentences to Koohi and 12 dismiss its precedential authority based on no contrary authority, offering instead an argument 13 directly contrary to the holdings of Koohi, that they "were not harmed by an activity that arose 14 out of an actual or perceived immediate hostility with enemy forces." (C. Opp. 23.) Plaintiffs 15 also argue that: (1) there is no significant conflict with state law (C. Opp. 21-23); (2) dismissal is 16 not warranted because Titan has not shown that it conformed its conduct to its contract (C. Opp.
17 18-20); and (3) the military contractor defense is only available to contractors who "design and 18 manufacture military equipment." (C. Opp. 20-21.) Each argument is without merit—the first 19 three ignore Koohi and the last is frivolous.

20 1. The Combatant Activities Exception Applies Here

21 Boyle v. United Technologies Corporation, 487 U.S. 500 (1988), held that where state law 22 would "significantly conflict" with "uniquely federal" interests, state law is pre-empted and the 23 claims precluded. (Mot. 12-13.) Boyle dismissed a defective design claim involving a military 24 helicopter crash during peacetime because of the conflict between state law and the uniquely 25 federal interests reflected in the FTCA's discretionary function exception. Koohi applied Boyle in 26 ¹ Plaintiffs' opposition to Titan's motion does not cite Koohi once, relying on the "incorporation" 27 of their arguments in opposition to CACI's different arguments on the matter. (T. Opp. 6-7.) 28 Notwithstanding plaintiffs' default, and their attempt to secure a double-length opposition brief by doing so, Titan responds here to the arguments advanced in opposition to CACI's brief.

1 a different factual context: a suit for injuries to passengers on an Iranian civilian airliner 2 mistakenly shot down by the Navy in a theater of combat. The Ninth Circuit held that the tort 3 claims—both state and federal—had to be dismissed against the military contractor that 4 manufactured an allegedly defective fire control system that caused the plane to be shot down.
5 Two facts, standing alone, compelled dismissal: the injuries (a) arose during a time of war; and 6 (b) were in connection with combatant activities. See Koohi, 976 F.2d at 1333. Under such 7 circumstances, the contractor owed no duty to the plaintiffs, no matter whether the injuries were 8 caused intentionally or by negligence.

9 Plaintiffs here not dispute that their claims arose during a war. Instead they argue that 10 because their injuries arose while they “were in detention,” they “were not harmed by an activity 11 that arose out of an actual or perceived immediate hostility with enemy forces.” (C. Opp. 23.)
12 However, this argument flies in the face of Koohi’s holding that “the term ‘combatant activities’ 13 includes ‘not only physical violence, but activities both necessary to and in direct connection with 14 actual hostilities.’” Koohi, 976 F.2d at 1333 (quoting Johnson v. United States, 170 F.2d 767, 15 770 (9th Cir. 1948)).

16 In Johnson v. United States, plaintiffs (commercial clam farmers) sued under the FTCA, 17 alleging that oils, sewage, and other noxious matter discharged from U.S. Navy ammunition ships 18 anchored in the waters of Discovery Bay, in Washington State, had contaminated their clam beds.
19 Those vessels had provided logistical support of combat operations in the Pacific. The Ninth 20 Circuit held that the ships were not engaged in combatant activities because they were no longer 21 in a theater of combat and the surrender of Japan had terminated combat. Id. at 770. The Court 22 made clear, however, (as it would later hold in Koohi) that the outcome would have differed had 23 hostilities continued or if the ships been located in the theater of combat, notwithstanding that the 24 ships themselves were not directly involved in combat. Id.

25 In Koohi, the Ninth Circuit held what had been anticipated by Johnson: claims against 26 military contractors for their support of military operations in a combat zone are barred as 27 combatant activities. It did not matter in Koohi that the victims were non-combatant civilians, 28 that the contractor may have performed negligently, recklessly, or in contravention to the terms of

1 its contract, or even that the actions of the Navy may have been unlawful. Nor did it matter that 2 the contractors' activities—the manufacture of electronic equipment—did not itself constitute 3 combat. It mattered only that the contractor's support was a "necessary adjunct" to military 4 activities in a war zone. Koohi, 976 F.2d at 1333 n.5.

5 Plaintiffs' argument rings particularly hollow given the Supreme Court's recent 6 observation that capture, detention, and interrogation by the military are important extensions of 7 the war power and an "important incident of war." Hamdi v. Rumsfeld, 124 S. Ct. 2633, 2640 8 (2004). Plaintiffs cite no contrary authority anywhere in their more than 90 pages of opposition.
9 Instead, they cite three District Court cases from other jurisdictions resolving suits for injuries 10 arising in the context of combat. (C. Opp. 23.) In each, recovery was denied.² These cases do 11 not limit the combatant activities exception to those factual settings, and certainly could not limit
12 the precedential authority of Johnson and Koohi. If anything, two of the cases support Titan's 13 position. In Clark, the alleged injuries were not inflicted by combat, but by a combination of 14 atmospheric contaminants to which plaintiff was exposed in the theater of combat. Rotko makes 15 clear that the combatant activity exception applies even where the injuries allegedly resulted from 16 ultra vires, illegal, and unconstitutional actions.

17 2. Plaintiffs' Claims Conflict with the Federal Interest in Warmaking

18 Plaintiffs argue that their claims present no significant conflict with federal interests 19 "[g]iven the federal interest in stopping torture." (C. Opp. 22.) This argument fails under Boyle 20 and Koohi because courts must examine the federal interest underlying the government's 21 undertaking—here the waging of war—not, as plaintiffs' argument suggests, the degree to which 22 a competing federal interest (prevention of torture) might be furthered by plaintiffs' suit. The

24 ² Although the subsequent history was not cited by plaintiffs, Minns v. United States, 974 F.
25 Supp. 500 (D. Md. 1997), was affirmed on other grounds without reaching the combatant 26 activities exception. See Minns, 155 F.3d 445, 452 (4th Cir. 1998). Clark v. United States, 974 27 F. Supp. 895 (E.D. Tex. 1996), dismissed plaintiff's claim that his exposure to toxins while 28 serving with the U.S. Army in the Gulf War caused his child to suffer birth defects. Rotko v.
Abrams, 338 F. Supp. 46 (D. Conn. 1971), aff'd, 455 F.2d 992 (2d Cir. 1972), dismissed claims based on plaintiffs' son's death in combat in Vietnam, allegedly resulting from military orders that were ultra vires, in violation of treaties and the Constitution, and not actionable under the FTCA.

1 combatant exception implements both a separation of powers concern—that courts should not be 2 in the business of second-guessing the actions of military commanders taken in a war zone—as 3 well as a preemption concern, namely that warmaking is a uniquely federal interest.

4 Plaintiffs simply ignore that the Executive’s power to wage war effectively is among the 5 most important federal interests—and one that is jealously guarded by the federal courts against 6 state or judicial intrusion: “While neither the Constitution nor the courts have defined the precise 7 scope of the foreign relations power that is denied to the states, it is clear that matters concerning 8 war are part of the inner core of this power.” Deutsch v. Turner Corp., 324 F.3d 692, 711 (9th 9 Cir.), cert. denied sub nom., 540 U.S. 820 (2003). Moreover, courts have long held that 10 warmaking is a function uniquely committed to the political branches, Hamdi v. Rumsfeld, 124 S.
11 Ct. at 2647, and that courts should not hear civil suits brought by enemy nationals against military 12 field commanders because such suits would cripple the paramount federal interest in effectively 13 waging our nation’s battles, Johnson v. Eisentrager, 339 U.S. 763, 779 (1950). It is well-settled 14 that a suit restraining the actions of agents of the government, including military contractors, no 15 less fetters government action than does a suit brought directly against government officials. See 16 Boyle, 487 U.S. at 512; Sanchez-Espinoza v. Reagan, 770 F.2d 202, 207 n.4 (D.C. Cir. 1985)
17 (Scalia, J.). It is equally well settled that a claim that military actions are illegal is not a reason 18 for permitting judicial inquiry through the tort system into the lawfulness of the U.S. military 19 actions. See Koohi, 976 F.2d at 1330 n.2.³

20 Therefore, the postulated federal interest in preventing torture does not equate to a private 21 cause of action against military contractors for actions taken in support of military operations in a 22 war zone. “The United States government is in the best position to monitor wrongful activity by 23 contractors, either by terminating their contracts or through criminal prosecution.” Bentzlin v.
24 Hughes Aircraft Co., 833 F. Supp. 1486, 1493 (C.D. Cal. 1993). In any case, plaintiffs’ argument
25 proves too much. Every application of the military contractor defense, or traditional government

26 _____
27 ³ The authority of the Political Branches over warmaking also undergirds the application of 28 political question doctrine here, which independently requires dismissal of plaintiffs’ claims as fully argued by CACI.

1 immunity for that matter, is at the expense of “the perhaps recurring harm to individual citizens”
2 who are denied recovery. Boyle, 487 U.S. at 523 (Brennan, J., dissenting) (quoting Doe v.
3 McMillan, 412 U.S. 306, 320 (1973)). That there is a federal interest in protecting tort victims—4 whether from alleged torture or otherwise—does not bar application of the military contractor
5 defense in situations where the United States has itself retained sovereign immunity. See § I.B.2, 6 infra (TVPA restricted to torture under color of foreign law and criminal prohibition, not civil 7 cause of action, for U.S. citizens accused of torture).

8 3. Contractual Compliance Is Irrelevant Under Koohi

9 Relying on Boyle, plaintiffs argue that the military contractor defense does not apply 10 because Titan has failed to demonstrate that it complied with the government’s specifications and 11 that, at any rate, Titan’s contract did not require it to torture defendants. (C. Opp. 18-20.) This 12 argument has no application in the context of combatant activities.

13 In Boyle state law significantly conflicted with the uniquely federal interests reflected by 14 the FTCA’s discretionary function exception that protects government specifications. To ensure 15 that the government’s discretion was at issue rather than the contractor’s, Boyle required the 16 defendant to show that it had complied with the government-approved specifications that formed 17 the basis of the suit.⁴ In Koohi, as here, the primary conflict was with the federal interest in 18 warmaking reflected by the combatant activities exception to the FTCA. In the context of that 19 interest, as opposed to the context of the discretionary function interest, the specificity of the 20 government contract and the contractors’ compliance are irrelevant. See Koohi, 976 F.2d 1328.
21 Where combatant activities of the U.S. military are implicated, one does not inquire into the 22 merits; the defense applies regardless of whether the challenged actions were taken “carefully or 23 negligently, properly or improperly.” Id. at 1335; see also Johnson, 170 F.2d at 769 (“[I]t may be 24 safely concluded that the ‘exception’ here involved relates to Governmental activities which by 25 their very nature should be free from the hindrance of a possible damage suit.”).

26 ⁴ See Boyle, 487 U.S. at 512 (inquiries into compliance assure “that the suit is within the area 27 where the policy of the ‘discretionary function’ would be frustrated—i.e., they assure that the 28 design feature in question was considered by a Government officer, and not merely by the contractor itself.”).

1 4. The Military Contractor Defense Applies to Service Contracts

2 Plaintiffs' contention that the government contractor defense does not apply to service
3 contracts (C. Opp. at 20-21), is frivolous. First, Boyle extended the government contractor 4 defense from service contracts to procurement contracts. See Boyle, 487 U.S. at 506 ("The 5 federal interest justifying [Yearsley's] holding surely exists as much in procurement contracts as 6 in performance contracts; we see no basis for a distinction."). Second, Malesko again endorsed 7 the application of the defense in the context of a service contract. Correctional Servs. Corp. v.
8 Malesko, 534 U.S. 61, 74 n.6 (2001) (recognizing government contractor defense in context of a 9 service contract for management of prison but finding its applicability unsupported in the record).
10 Third, plaintiffs grossly misrepresent the Ninth Circuit law on this issue. Snell v. Bell Helicopter 11 Textron, 107 F.3d 744, 746 n.1 (9th Cir. 1997) and the other cases cited at C. Opp. 20 do not 12 address whether the military contractor defense applies to service contracts. Snell stated nothing 13 more than the fact that the Ninth Circuit recognizes a "military contractor" not a "government 14 contractor" defense. Snell and the other Ninth Circuit cases relied upon by plaintiffs merely 15 represent further examples of the military contractor defense being applied in the context of 16 procurement contracts. They say nothing about its application to military service contracts.⁵

17 5. Plaintiffs' Tort Claims Conflict with Other Federal Interests

18 a. Discretionary Function

19 Plaintiffs argue that the discretionary function exception is inapplicable because (1) Titan 20 has failed to show that it conformed to its contract and cannot do so to the extent their allegations 21 of torture are accepted as true (C. Opp. 18-20), and (2) unconstitutional and unlawful activity falls 22 outside the scope of the discretionary function exception. (C. Opp. 21.) In short, plaintiffs argue 23 that the behavior they allege places the conduct outside the scope of authority vested in any 24 government official.

25 ⁵ Remarkably, the only court of appeals authority cited by plaintiffs that actually addresses this 26 issue, Hudgens v. Bell Helicopters/Textron, 328 F.3d 1329 (11th Cir. 2003) (C. Opp. 20), clearly 27 holds that the defense applies to service contracts. Contrary to plaintiffs' representation that 28 Hudgens involved the manufacture of helicopters (C. Opp. 20), the civilian contractor was repairing and maintaining them, the quintessential service contract. The same is true of the district court cases cited by plaintiffs. (C. Opp. 21.)

1 Plaintiffs' arguments fail because they cannot simultaneously contend that the actions of 2 the conspiring government officials were at once official, subjecting them to the substantive 3 international law norms they allege, and ultra vires. See Sanchez-Espinoza, 770 F.2d 202 4 (dismissing claims against contractors that allegedly provided substantial assistance for murder, 5 kidnapping, and rape because they were supporting U.S. officials acting in their official capacity).
6 If, as plaintiffs contend elsewhere, government officials acting in their official capacities, 7 including the Secretary of Defense, contracted with Titan to provide linguists and promulgated 8 interrogation policies that led to their injuries, then their claims are barred by the uniquely federal 9 interests codified in the discretionary function exception.⁶ (Mot. 15 n.16.) If, as plaintiffs now 10 contend, the conspiring government officials were acting ultra vires then neither their actions nor 11 the actions of the Titan employees who allegedly conspired with them fall within the scope of the 12 ATS where official action is required "as a jurisdictional necessity." Sanchez-Espinoza, 770 F.2d 13 at 207.⁷ Moreover, to the extent that plaintiffs now allege that low-level military officials acted in 14 an ultra vires manner in conspiring with Titan translators to commit unlawful acts, the Titan 15 employees were acting outside the scope of employment in the same way military official were 16 and their actions cannot be attributed to Titan. See § I.C.2, infra.

17 b. Foreign Activities

18 Rather than contend with the foreign country exception to the FTCA, plaintiffs argue that 19 the exception does not apply because they do not seek to apply foreign law, only domestic and 20 international law. (C. Opp. 23.) Plaintiffs' contention is off the mark and contrary to the holding 21 of Sosa. The foreign country exception to the FTCA "bars all claims based on any injury suffered 22 in a foreign country...." Sosa, 124 S. Ct. at 2754. Plaintiffs' assertion that they seek to apply

23 ⁶ In the SAC and RICO statement, plaintiffs quite clearly advanced the position that government 24 officials involved in the conspiracy acted in an "official capacity." See, e.g., SAC ¶¶ 67(b); 257; 25 263; 269; 275; RICO Statement at 20 ("Defendants' actions were accorded the color of the United States law because they were conspiring with certain public officials, including certain military officials, and other persons acting in an official capacity on behalf of the United States.").

26 ⁷ In a highly misleading citation to Sosa, plaintiffs suggest that the Supreme Court endorsed 27 liability for torture by private actors under the ATS. (T. Opp. 17, citing Sosa, 124 S. Ct. at 2766 28 n.20.) The Court did no such thing. At most, it implied, through a compare...with citation, that genocide by private actors violates international law.

1 only domestic and international law is of no consequence. That the United States would 2 unquestionably be immune from suit by virtue of Sosa's reading of the foreign country exception 3 means that Titan, acting under the direction and control of the U.S. military, similarly cannot be 4 sued. See Butters v. Vance Int'l, Inc., 225 F.3d 462, 466-67 (4th Cir. 2000); Sanchez-Espinoza, 5 770 F.2d at 207 n.4.

6 B. The ATS Claims Must Be Dismissed

7 Titan's opening brief demonstrated that Koochi requires dismissal of the ATS claims, as do 8 several other deficiencies in the claims; plaintiffs largely fail to respond, arguing only that Sosa 9 endorsed Marcos, which, even if correct, is irrelevant. Sosa supports dismissal. It confirmed that 10 ATS claims must be analyzed like any other implied cause of action, requiring deference to 11 legislative judgments (such as the combatant activities exception) and consideration of common 12 law defenses that might not apply to statutory actions.⁸

13 1. Koochi Requires Dismissal of the ATS Claims

14 Titan explained how Sosa's holding confirmed Koochi's binding precedent in this Circuit: 15 ATS claims are barred where based on injuries incurred incident to combatant activities of the 16 U.S. military just as state common law claims are precluded and preempted. (Mot. 24-26.)
17 Plaintiffs offer no substantive response, incredibly writing that, "[d]efendants simply fail to 18 address the Plaintiffs' federal common law claims." (C. Opp. 23.) This statement and the 19 argument that the ATS claims survive in the face of a valid military contractor defense (C. Opp.
20 23-24), are frivolous. See Mot. 13-15; 21-24; 25-27 (discussing Koochi and its theoretical basis).

21 2. Sosa Supports Dismissal of the ATS Claims

22 Rather than substantively address Koochi, plaintiffs argue that, "Sosa upholds the line of 23 rulings that gave aliens access...to sue their torturers" because it "squarely upheld and endorsed 24 the reasoning of...the Ninth Circuit in [Marcos]" and "adopted the reasoning of Filartiga." (T.
25 Opp. 10-11.) Plaintiffs' argument is misplaced. First, Sosa did not uphold any ATS claims; it

26 ⁸ We also showed that courts are jurisdictionally required to subject ATS claims to a "more 27 searching review" (Mot. 27-28), an important point to which plaintiffs failed to respond.
28 Plaintiffs' extended discussion of their individual ATS claims (T. Opp. 20-25), does not undermine our original discussion of these issues and we stand on our opening brief.

1 held that the claim for arbitrary detention that the Ninth Circuit had recognized was outside the 2 narrow class of claims cognizable under the ATS, and expressed a series of cautions on implying 3 new causes of action under ATS. Second, regardless of whether (and for what purposes) the 4 Court endorsed Marcos and Filartiga, neither those cases, nor any others relied upon by 5 plaintiffs, involved ATS claims with the key facts that require dismissal here: injuries incurred 6 incident to the combatant activities of the U.S. military. Those cases involved military actions of 7 other countries, or the acts of other sovereigns. Notwithstanding plaintiffs' penchant for 8 describing ugly acts of torture in place of legal argument, not one of those cases involved the U.S.
9 military as the sovereign actor, let alone U.S. combat operations, both of which underlie Koohi
10 and constitute one of the special factors that preclude liability for Titan.

11 Marcos involved neither an international armed conflict nor, more importantly, the U.S.
12 military.⁹ Plaintiffs' misplaced reliance on Marcos demonstrates that they have failed (1) to find 13 any support for extending ATS to claims involving the U.S. military; and (2) to appreciate the 14 critical distinction between the U.S. military and foreign militaries for ATS claims.¹⁰ This critical 15 distinction—rooted in the difference between the retained sovereign immunity of the United 16 States in its own courts and the immunity that Congress has granted foreign sovereigns in our 17 courts—explains why plaintiffs cannot identify a single case allowing an ATS claim in the 18 context of U.S. military operations, and why the only cases to consider such claims rejected them.
19 See Koohi, 976 F.2d 1328; Sanchez-Espinoza, 770 F.2d 202; Bentzlin, 833 F. Supp. 1486.

20 Titan also demonstrated in its opening brief that Sosa independently reinforced the 21 unavailability of the ATS claims here because (1) the common law is reluctant to infer causes of 22 action under new circumstances in the absence of Congressional action and (2) the FTCA's

23 _____
24 ⁹ Plaintiffs also argue that the “traditional ATCA claims upheld in Sosa have historically arisen 25 out of conditions involving armed conflict,” citing Marcos, Kadic, and Presbyterian Church of Sudan. (T. Opp. 15). Again, none of those cases involved the U.S. military and they are not relevant to the application of the military contractor defense here.

26 ¹⁰ See Sanchez-Espinoza, 770 F.2d at 207 n.5 (“Since the doctrine of foreign sovereign immunity 27 is quite distinct from the doctrine of domestic sovereign immunity that we apply here...nothing in 28 today's decision necessarily conflicts with the decision of the Second Circuit in Filartiga v. Pena-Irala”) (internal citations omitted).

1 combatant activity exception represents Congress’s judgment that claims arising under such 2 circumstances are not permitted. (Mot. 25-26.) Plaintiffs first respond (T. Opp. 12-14), that the 3 Court did not mean what it said in Sosa, 124 S. Ct. at 2762-63—that courts must be cautious in 4 extending ATS claims to new circumstances and, in doing so, must defer to “legislative 5 judgment.” Not constrained by their own arguments any more than the precedent they ignore, 6 plaintiffs later reverse themselves and argue the converse: that this Court should be guided by 7 Congress’s legislative judgment, as expressed in the Torture Victim Protection Act of 1991
8 (“TVPA”). (T. Opp. 14.) Plaintiffs are right that Congress has spoken in the TVPA: it expressed 9 Congress’s judgment by creating a statutory damages action for victims of torture only against an 10 individual acting under authority of a foreign nation, 106 Stat. 73 § 2(a). Thus, it codifies the 11 critical distinction between retained U.S. sovereign immunity and foreign sovereign immunity 12 earlier recognized in Sanchez-Espinoza.¹¹ See n.10, supra.

13 Plaintiffs also attempt to limit the effect of Sosa’s dramatic recasting of the ATS’s 14 theoretical underpinnings by arguing that the five reasons for judicial caution enumerated by the 15 Court are not “for lower courts to apply to every ATCA claim,” and that the “Sosa Court 16 specifically chose not to adopt ‘a policy of case-specific deference to the political branches.’” (T.
17 Opp. 13). Plaintiffs simply disregard the plain meaning of what the Sosa Court wrote, not to 18 mention the holding of that case.¹² The Court chose not to apply such deference to that case 19 because it was unnecessary. See 124 S. Ct. at 2762 (“This requirement is fatal to Alvarez’s 20 claim.”). The Court admonished lower courts that “[a] series of reasons argue for judicial caution 21 when considering the kinds of individual claims that might implement the jurisdiction conferred 22 by the early statute.” Id.

23 ¹¹ That the ATS “remain[s] intact to permit suits based on other norms that already exist or may 24 ripen in the future into rules of customary international law,” H.R. Rep. No. 102-367, pt. 1, p. 4 25 (1991), reprinted in 1992 U.S.C.C.A.N. 85, 87, does not alter the analysis because no ATS claims 26 have been allowed in the context of U.S. military operations. Equally significantly, Congress provided that there is no civil cause of action for torture committed by U.S. citizens. See 18
U.S.C. § 2340A & 2340B.

27 ¹² Plaintiffs omit a key clause: “Another possible limitation that we need not apply here is a 28 policy of case-specific deference to the political branches.” Sosa, 124 S. Ct. at 2766 n.21

1 3. Corporations Are Not Subject to ATS Claims

2 Plaintiffs concede that Malesko bars their Constitutional claims against Titan (their 3 attempt to disavow such claims notwithstanding), but seek to limit Malesko to Bivens actions. (T.
4 Opp. 17 n.13.) As set forth in our opening brief (Mot. 26-27), and again not disputed, Malesko 5 applied the principle that the federal common law is reluctant to infer actions in the absence of 6 legislation. Sosa cited it for that proposition (Mot. 28), and given Sosa's holding that ATS
7 actions are implied actions, Malesko is equally applicable here. Plaintiffs respond that Sosa's 8 "endorsement" of Filartiga, Marcos, and Kadic support ATS claims against corporations. (T.
9 Opp. 17). Without debating whether Sosa endorsed those cases (and for what propositions), none 10 of them involved corporate defendants and therefore do not address this point.

11 Two additional arguments are equally unfounded: Plaintiffs contend that Malesko is 12 inapplicable because the ATS arises under international law, not federal common law and the 13 deterrence rationale does not apply. (T. Opp. 17.) The premises are wrong: ATS suits are 14 federal common law claims that enforce a narrow class of international norms, Sosa, 124 S. Ct. at 15 2761; they do not exist "to recognize that courts are responsible for enforcing international law."
16 (T. Opp. 17 n.13.) Nor does this affect the applicability of Malesko to ATS suits: The inability to 17 sue corporations is a function of the limits of implied rights of action under federal common law.
18 Relying upon Malesko, Sosa made clear that the federal common law's reluctance to recognize 19 implied causes of action is fully applicable to ATS actions. Sosa, 124 S. Ct. at 2762-63; see also 20 id. at 2772 (Scalia, J., concurring in part and concurring in judgment) ("Bivens provides perhaps 21 the closest analogy [to implied causes of action under ATS].").

22 Consistent with the rules developed in the context of Bivens actions, the federal common 23 law will not recognize an implied ATS action for every claim that properly asserts violation of an 24 international norm. Sosa, 124 S. Ct. at 2763 ("The creation of a private right of action raises 25 issues beyond the mere consideration whether underlying primary conduct should be allowed or 26 not...") (emphasis added). Put another way, there is a distinction between the applicability of the 27 underlying substantive norm—informed by international law in ATS claims and the Constitution 28 in Bivens claims—and the availability of an implied remedy under federal common law where

1 Congress has not spoken. Compare Malesko, 534 U.S. 61 (no implied action against corporations
2 for Constitutional violations) with Lugar v. Edmondson Oil Co., 457 U.S. 922, 936-37 (1982)
3 (statutory action against corporations for Constitutional violations). The rationale of deterring the 4 individuals who commit the wrongs by requiring the suits to be against them is as applicable 5 under ATS as under Bivens.

6 4. Special Factors Require Dismissal of the ATS Claims

7 By placing ATS claims in the federal common law, Sosa made the ATS subject to the 8 same limitations that courts have imposed on Bivens actions, including the “special factors 9 counseling hesitation in the absence of affirmative action by Congress.” United States v. Stanley, 10 483 U.S. 669, 678 (1987) (quotation omitted). Two special factors apply here: the existence of 11 alternative remedies, Schweiker v. Chilicky, 487 U.S. 412, 423 (1988); Malesko, 534 U.S. at 66-12 70, and whether injuries arise incident to military service, Stanley, 483 U.S. at 683-84. See Mot.
13 21-24. To ignore the impact of these special factors on ATS claims would result in recognizing 14 more expansive common law remedies in favor of aliens than on behalf of U.S. citizens—a 15 perverse result unsupported by any expressed legislative judgment (and certainly none is 16 identified by plaintiffs).

17 On exhaustion, plaintiffs argue that defendants have not established plaintiffs’ failure to 18 exhaust and there are no alternate remedies available. (T. Opp. 25-26.) Plaintiffs’ first argument 19 fails because alternate remedies operate to bar implied actions rather than postpone suit until after 20 exhaustion occurs. (Mot. 21-24; Malesko, 534 U.S. at 66-70.) Plaintiffs’ second argument relies 21 on factual assertions that are contrary to their own allegations and that would require dismissal of 22 their claims for other reasons. Plaintiffs argue that the FCA is unavailable because (a) Titan 23 employees were independent contractors (T. Opp. 26 n.33); (b) plaintiffs may be considered 24 “unfriendly to the United States” (C. Opp. at 44); and (c) their injuries arose in combat. (T. Opp.
25 15 n.12.) All these are contrary to plaintiffs’ factual allegations and legal positions taken 26 elsewhere. See T. Opp. 8-10 (repeatedly asserting joint venture between Titan and the U.S.
27 military); SAC 23-34 (asserting plaintiffs detained without cause, implying they were not 28

1 combatants); T. Opp. 23 (asserting injuries were not result of combat).¹³ Plaintiffs' treatment of 2 CPA Order 17, (T. Opp. 25), which immunizes Coalition government and contracting personnel 3 from Iraqi courts, suffers in the same way: Titan's employees are immunized by CPA 17 only if 4 its employees' actions were in compliance with its contract, which plaintiffs dispute to avoid the 5 discretionary function exception. (C. Opp. 18-20.)

6 Plaintiffs also contend that Congress must express its intention that alternate remedies
7 displace implied actions and the remedies must be complete to do so. (C. Opp. at 42-43.)
8 Plaintiffs are incorrect on both counts. Bivens actions are permitted despite overlapping FTCA 9 relief was because it is "crystal clear" that Congress intended the FTCA and Bivens to serve as 10 'parallel' and 'complementary' sources of liability." Malesko, 534 U.S. 61, 68 (internal citations 11 omitted).¹⁴ The limits on payment or review of FCA claims does not nullify their availability as 12 alternative remedies. See Bush v. Lucas, 462 U.S. 367, 388 (1983) (alternate remedies need not 13 provide complete relief). Thus, the limitation on the Service Secretary's FCA authority (about 14 which plaintiffs are not completely candid, see 10 U.S.C. § 2734(d)) and the lack of subsequent 15 judicial review of the Army's determination (C. Opp. 41-43), are irrelevant.

16 Implied causes of action must also be dismissed where the danger of interference with 17 military discipline is too great. United States v. Stanley, 483 U.S. 669, 684 (1987). Similar 18 considerations are addressed by the military contractor defense and the political question doctrine, 19 but, after Sosa, they are equally applicable as a "special factor." Plaintiffs contend that Stanley is 20 inapplicable because they are suing civilians (C. Opp. at 45), an argument rejected in Stanley and 21 Malesko: "We have reached a similar result in the military context, Chappell v. Wallace, 462 22

23 ¹³ Plaintiffs also contend that the FCA is unavailable because: (1) "the military has indicated in 24 writing...that actions against independent private contractors are appropriate to pursue in federal 25 court." (T. Opp. 26.) This grossly mischaracterizes the email, which states that the filing of the 26 suit "will not affect any recommendation made on the FCA claim of Mr. Saleh," (C. Opp. Exhibit 27 I). That in no way "indicates" that such suit is "appropriate"; if anything, it indicates that Mr.
28 Saleh's FCA claim is viable.

¹⁴ The four cases plaintiffs cite to establish the proposition that the MCA is not an exclusive remedy are inapplicable because they deal with whether express statutory actions, not implied actions, are displaced by the MCA. See C. Opp. at 44.

1 U.S. 296, 304 (1983), even where the defendants were alleged to have been civilian personnel,
2 United States v. Stanley, 483 U.S. 669, 681 (1987).” Malesko, 534 U.S. at 68.¹⁵

3 C. Titan Is Not Liable for the Alleged Torts

4 Nowhere is plaintiffs’ failure to allege the facts necessary to support their claims against 5 Titan more stark than in the failure to plead facts supporting direct or vicarious Titan liability for 6 the alleged misconduct. Notwithstanding the liberal use of the term “Torture Conspirators” 7 (without specifics of how Titan conspired) or the generic term “Defendants” (without identifying 8 the specific acts that give rise to Titan’s liability) the opposition confirms that plaintiffs have not 9 stated a claim against Titan. “[F]ederal courts repeatedly have required a plaintiff suing multiple 10 defendants to set forth sufficient facts to lay a foundation for recovery against each particular 11 defendant named in the suit.” Clark v. Mayfield, 1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 17401, at *11 (S.D. Cal.
12 1994) (Rhoades, J.). Filing voluminous exhibits and reports does not excuse plaintiffs from 13 making plain what each defendant did. Id. at *13-14. Plaintiffs have done little more 14 substantively than the pro se plaintiff in Clark and their conclusory allegations of joint venture, 15 partnership, and agency, unsupported by factual pleading, fail as to Titan.

16 1. Plaintiffs Have Not Alleged Facts for Direct Corporate Liability of Titan

17 Plaintiffs do not deny that managerial participation in the alleged torts, or formulation of 18 policy that encouraged or allowed abuses (Mot. 16), are required to plead corporate liability.
19 Instead, they contend that their allegations of deficient Titan hiring, training, and supervision are 20 sufficient because they allege “managerial involvement.” (T. Opp. 8, citing SAC ¶¶ 57-60, 86.)
21 “Managerial involvement” in the contracts is not enough to plead Titan’s liability for the alleged 22 torts of others. Plaintiffs must plead managerial involvement in the torts. As a case relied upon 23 by plaintiffs makes clear (T. Opp. 8), such allegations of negligence in hiring, training, and 24 ¹⁵ See also Ricks v. Nickels, 295 F.3d 1124 (10th Cir. 2002) (former soldier); Whitley v. United 25 States, 170 F.3d 1061 (11th Cir. 1999) (foreign soldier); Minns v. United States, 155 F.3d 445, 26 448-49 (4th Cir. 1998) (collecting cases applying Stanley to civilian plaintiffs); Daberkow v.

27 United States, 581 F.2d 785 (9th Cir. 1978) (foreign soldier). Plaintiffs also argue that Stanley is 28 inapplicable because 10 U.S.C. § 938 (“Article 138”) is unavailable to civilians. (C. Opp. 46).
But Article 138 is mechanism for challenging improper treatment, and these plaintiffs enjoy an equivalent remedy: the Great Writ. See Rasul v. Bush, 124 S. Ct. 2686 (2004); see also Malesko, 534 U.S. at 74 (injunctive relief weighs against availability of implied damages action).

1 supervision do not state a claim for corporate liability for the intentional torts alleged by 2 plaintiffs. See Farmers Ins. Group v. County of Santa Clara, 11 Cal. 4th 992, 1011 (1995)
3 (holding employer negligence irrelevant to vicarious liability for employees' torts).¹⁶

4 2. Plaintiffs Have Not Alleged Facts for Vicarious Liability of Titan

5 Plaintiffs aver in their opposition that they have "ample evidence linking Titan 6 employees" to the alleged torts. (T. Opp. 2; emphasis added.) But the liability of corporations for 7 the acts of their alleged employees is controlled by the principles of respondeat superior, which 8 require more than the bare allegation of employment. (Mot. 16-17) By not addressing these 9 arguments in their Opposition, plaintiffs implicitly concede that they have not stated any grounds 10 for respondeat superior liability for the acts of Titan's employees.¹⁷ Instead they argue agency to 11 impute to Titan the alleged acts of (mostly) unidentified others, but in doing so and lacking a 12 factual basis for agency liability, plaintiffs conflate agency with conspiracy, joint venture, and 13 partnership. See T. Opp. 8-10. The SAC supports none of these theories.

14 a. No Claim for Respondeat Superior Liability Based on Agency

15 The Opposition maintains that Titan's motion did not address agency liability (T. Opp. 9), 16 in disregard of Titan's discussion at § I.A.2 of its motion. (Mot. 16-17, especially n.18 17 specifically discussing agency.) No matter—plaintiffs do nothing to undermine the arguments 18 they ignored. While plaintiffs correctly state the law of agency in California—which requires that 19 "each party manifest[] acceptance of a relationship whereby one party is to perform work for the 20 ¹⁶ Plaintiffs also rely on their allegation that "Team Titan," advertised for "male U.S.

21 citizens...who must undergo a favorable U.S. Army Counterintelligence screening interview" 22 (SAC ¶ 86), to support managerial involvement in tortious activity. Hiring candidates acceptable to the Army, as contractually required (SOW § C-1.4.1.2), cannot be a source of liability.

23 ¹⁷ Although plaintiffs acknowledge that vicarious liability requires that the acts be within the 24 scope of employment (T. Opp. 9), they have no response to their failure to plead that the acts 25 were within the scope. (Mot. 16-17.) No wonder. Farmers Insurance Group considered whether 26 a prison guard's on-the-job sexual harassment was within the scope of employment. The Court 27 noted that, even if the torts alleged were foreseeable, in the "absence of a causal link" between the 28 torts and the officer's work, the acts were outside the scope of employment. Farmers Ins., 11 Cal.
4th at 1011. Moreover, a government investigation on which plaintiffs rely heavily, the "Schlesinger Report," concluded that the abuses at Abu Ghraib were the result of "aberrant behavior" and the "predilections" of the individual perpetrators. Schlesinger Report at 13. In Farmers, the California Supreme Court made clear that such acts taken for the "employees' personal gratification" can not result in vicarious liability. Farmers Ins., 11 Cal. 4th at 1007.

1 other under the latter's direction" (T. Opp. 9)—they have not (and cannot) allege that the soldiers, 2 government officials, and others accused of orchestrating the abuses at Abu Ghraib accepted a 3 relationship whereby they would work at Titan's direction. Nor are the vague assertions that 4 Titan influenced government officials or military decision makers sufficient to establish agency, 5 which requires establishing the right to control the details of the work. See 2 Summary of Cal.
6 Law § 14. Broad supervisory powers or the power to influence or make suggestions is not 7 enough. See McDonald v. Shell Oil Co., 44 Cal. 2d 785, 790 (1955).¹⁸

8 b. Allegations Do Not Establish a Joint Venture or Partnership

9 Plaintiffs' complaint simply failed to allege facts sufficient to find a joint venture because, 10 inter alia, the SAC does not allege facts demonstrating the right to joint control by the co-
11 venturers. (Mot. 16.) In response, plaintiffs do nothing more than reiterate their baseless 12 allegations of Titan participation in the "conspiracy", without explaining how that allegation 13 establishes the existence of a joint venture. (T. Opp. 8, citing SAC ¶ 25.)

14 Plaintiffs go on to further muddy their claim by introducing a new theory: that Titan is 15 liable under partnership liability. (T. Opp. 8-9.) The SAC does not allege that Titan was a 16 partner with any entity or that Titan participated as co-owner of any business. As the treatise 17 plaintiffs cite makes clear "[a] partnership is an association of two or more persons to carry on as 18 co-owners a business for profit." 9 Witkin, Summary of Cal. Law, Partnership § 14 (9th ed.
19 1989) (emphasis in the original). There are no such allegations in the SAC.

20 c. Allegations Do Not Establish Conspiracy

21 In an attempt to salvage their claims of vicarious liability, plaintiffs attempt to bolster their 22 claims with conclusory allegations of conspiracy. (T. Opp. 9.) Such conclusory allegations are 23 insufficient to support a civil conspiracy claim. See Marts v. Hines, 68 F.3d 134, 136 (5th Cir.
24 1995). Civil conspiracy requires "an object to be accomplished, a meeting of the minds on the 25 ¹⁸ Plaintiffs also claim that Titan ratified the actions of all soldiers and others that acted 26 "consistently" with the U.S. Army report known as the "Miller Report". (T. Opp. 10.) Setting 27 aside the fact that the Army, not Titan, issued the Miller Report, ratification requires that the 28 alleged agent purport to act for the ratifying party. See Emery v. Visa Int'l Serv. Ass'n, 95 Cal.

App. 4th 952, 955 (2002). There are no allegations that soldiers or other government officials held themselves out as agents of Titan.

1 object or course of action, one or more overt acts, and damages as the proximate result thereof.”
2 16 Am. Jur. 2d § 51; see also Vieux v. E. Bay Reg'l Park Dist., 906 F.2d 1330, 1343 (9th Cir.
3 1990). To be a co-conspirator requires an actual agreement to conspire, Vieux, 906 F.2d at 1343, 4 with knowledge of the co-conspirators' unlawful objectives. See Moore v. Brewster, 96 F.3d
5 1240, 1245 (9th Cir. 1996). This means that the soldiers, government officials and others
6 involved in the treatment of detainees in Iraq cannot be implicitly or incidentally incorporated 7 into the “Torture Conspiracy” by their mere presence, knowledge, or even their actions. See 8 Kidron v. Movie Acquisition Corp., 40 Cal. App. 4th 1571, 1582 (1995) (knowledge of a planned 9 tort is insufficient, absent intent to conspire); People v. Austin, 23 Cal. App. 4th 1596, 1607 10 (1994) (evidence of act furthering illegal purpose is not sufficient to prove conspiracy absent 11 knowledge and intent) overruled in part on other grounds by People v. Palmer, 24 Cal. 4th 856, 12 861 (2001). It is also insufficient to allege that Titan's management “knew or should have 13 known” that torts would be committed. See Schick v. Lerner, 193 Cal. App. 3d 1321, 1328 14 (1987). It must be shown that the “co-conspirators” (many of whom are high ranking officials of 15 our government) actually agreed with Titan and that they intended that these acts be carried out.
16 Plaintiffs' filings fall far short of alleging facts that establish those extraordinary charges.

17 The most detailed allegations in support of the alleged conspiracy are found in Paragraph 18 14 of plaintiffs' RICO Case Statement, which requires plaintiffs to “describe in detail the facts 19 showing the existence of the alleged conspiracy.” There, plaintiffs allege that: (1) Titan recruited 20 only persons acceptable to the government; (2) Titan worked “hand-in-hand” on teams with 21 CACI employees and government officials; (3) some of these teams engaged in illegal conduct, 22 and (4) there are additional, unspecified facts. (RCS ¶ 14.) In plaintiffs' Motion for Class 23 Certification they add the allegation that “Titan engaged in acts and omissions on a corporate 24 level that corporate officials knew or should have known would result in their employees 25 participating in the Torture Conspiracy.” (Mot. for Class Cert. at 5.) None of these allegations 26 are sufficient to establish civil conspiracy.

27
28

1 Plaintiffs incorporate into their filings three exhaustive government investigations of 2 detainee abuse.¹⁹ These investigations did not find any suggestion of conspiracy; they establish 3 the opposite. The Fay Report found the primary causes of the detainee abuse to be individual 4 misconduct, a lack of discipline, and poor military leadership. (Fay 2.) The Schlesinger Report 5 criticized the actions of government officials from Secretary Rumsfeld, to senior Generals, and on 6 down to individual soldiers. See Schlesinger 5-19. Nowhere in the 102-page final report did the 7 Schlesinger panel use the word conspiracy, find that there was any plan or agreement between 8 Titan and any entity, or even imply that The Titan Corporation was in any way responsible for the 9 abuses at Abu Ghraib. If anything, the criticism was that government policy, not contractor 10 policy, set the conditions for the abuses conducted by the individuals. Id.

11 II. Plaintiffs' Statutory Claims Must Be Dismissed

12 A. Plaintiffs' RICO Claims Must Be Dismissed

13 Titan's motion showed that (1) no RICO claim exists because the United States 14 government is a necessary member of the alleged enterprise; (2) plaintiffs' allegations are 15 insufficient to tie Titan to CACI without the government; (3) plaintiffs lack standing because they 16 fail to allege property losses proximately caused by Titan; and (4) RICO does not reach the 17 alleged extraterritorial conduct. (Mot. 31-43). In response, plaintiffs attempt to run from their 18 pleadings: they disregard their RICO case statement to put forth an ever-shifting enterprise and 19 allege damage that is not in their complaint and which is neither legally sufficient nor caused by 20 the alleged enterprise. None of these contortions rescue plaintiffs' RICO claim.²⁰

21 ¹⁹ The Fay Report, Ex. A to Plaintiffs' Motion for Preliminary Injunction, the Schlesinger Report, 22 Ex. B to Plaintiffs' Motion for Preliminary Injunction, and the Taguba Report, Ex. H to SAC.
23 Plaintiffs' attached exhibits are a part of their pleading for all purposes, (Fed. R. Civ. P. 10(c)), 24 and therefore their statements should be accepted as true for the purposes of a motion to dismiss.
See Karam v. City of Burbank, 352 F.3d 1188, 1192 (9th Cir. 2003). Where the facts demonstrated by an exhibit are at variance with the pleading, the exhibit controls. See 2-10 Moore's Federal Practice § 10.05 n.20 (collecting cases).

25 ²⁰ Even if plaintiffs had stated a RICO claim, they cannot avoid the military contractor defense.
26 See Chappell v. Robbins, 73 F.3d 918, 925 (9th Cir. 1996) ("In passing RICO, Congress did not 27 [intend] to displace common-law immunities."). As they often do when confronted with 28 analogous holdings, plaintiffs assert without a single case in support, that Chappell did not mean what it said, but is limited to "legislative immunity." (T. Opp. 29.) In doing so they ignore the rationale of the case: the continued vitality of common-law defenses.

1 1. Plaintiffs' Enterprise Allegations Do Not State a Claim

2 Perhaps recognizing that they have pled themselves out of court, plaintiffs declare that the 3 alleged enterprise does not include the United States but only “some employees of the United 4 States.” (T. Opp. 28.) This bald assertion, however, cannot avoid the allegations of the SAC and 5 plaintiffs’ RICO case statement, whose purpose is to provide notice of plaintiffs’ alleged RICO 6 claim. See Civ. L. R. 11.1; Gutierrez v. Givens, 1 F. Supp. 2d 1077, 1087-98 (S.D. Cal. 1998).
7 As Titan highlighted in its opening brief (Mot. 33-34), plaintiffs’ core assertion is that 8 government officials, including the Secretary of Defense and other senior Department of Defense 9 officials—both civilian and military—”adopted and/or implemented policies and practices that 10 led to detainees being kidnapped, tortured, threatened with death and bodily harm, physically and 11 mentally permanently disabled, and, in some cases, murdered.” (RCS 4.) Plaintiffs repeatedly 12 allege that these officials were “acting in an official capacity on behalf of the United States.”
13 (SAC ¶¶ 257, 263, 269, 275; RCS 20.) These are not merely “some employees of the United 14 States wrongfully participat[ing]” in an alleged enterprise.²¹ In total, plaintiffs identify 126 15 soldiers, officers, and civilian officials in the Department of Defense as possible participants in 16 the enterprise. (RCS 4-5.)

17 In an attempt to avoid the fatal flaw in their enterprise, plaintiffs recharacterize Titan’s 18 argument as one for that calls for “absolute immunity...to insulate private corporations from 19 liability merely because they conspire with those government officials willing to act outside the 20 law,” and then spend several pages knocking down their straw man of “qualified immunity” for 21 “private actors who conspire with [government employees].” (T. Opp. 28.) In doing so, plaintiffs 22 do not address the real issue: the impossibility of a RICO enterprise involving government 23 employees acting in their official capacity. Compare Mot. 34 with T. Opp. 27-29.

24
25 ²¹ Plaintiffs’ counsel, on behalf of one of the parties it seeks to add as a plaintiff in this case, has 26 requested a criminal prosecution in Germany based on the conduct at issue here. That case is 27 brought solely against the government officials, among others Secretary of Defense Donald 28 Rumsfeld, Former CIA Director George Tenet, and Undersecretary of Defense for Intelligence
Dr. Stephen Cambone, along with various military officials. See <http://www.ccr-ny.org/v2/reports/report.asp?ObjID=TCRIT9TuSb&Content=471> (viewed 12/3/04).

1 Plaintiffs have not even pled an enterprise of CACI and Titan alone. As we pointed out 2 (Mot. 35-36), plaintiffs must allege the actual business and decision-making structure of the 3 alleged enterprise. In opposition, plaintiffs point to a laundry list of allegations, none of which 4 plead the required facts, but instead concern alleged contacts among, and actions taken by, the 5 alleged members of the enterprise. (T. Opp. 31.²²) Plaintiffs' remaining basis for an enterprise 6 between CACI and Titan is "Team Titan"—a joint venture between Titan and CACI that had 7 nothing to do with Iraq. While plaintiffs contend that they are "on firm terrain when alleging that 8 'Team Titan' exists" (T. Opp. 5-6), they cannot escape that their original claim that Team Titan 9 provided services to the U.S. military in Iraq—the only pleaded link between CACI and Titan 10 supporting the alleged enterprise—was unsupportable and based on a false exhibit that plaintiffs 11 withdrew.²³

12 To salvage the value of "Team Titan" for the claims, plaintiffs attach an email and argue 13 that it shows that "Titan intends to use the 'Team Titan' contract to deploy persons to Iraq." (T.
14 Opp. 5-6.) The email says no such thing. It states repeatedly that the Team Titan contract 15 ("A&AS") has not been used to deploy personnel to Iraq: "no one has used this contract to 16 support operations in Iraq", "A&AS is not being used for anything outside of the UK and 17 Germany at this time", and "The translator work in Iraq was performed by another Group at Titan 18 and not associated with...the A&AS contract in any way." (T. Opp. Exhibit G).

19 2. Plaintiffs Lack Standing

20 Plaintiffs do not dispute that all but plaintiffs Ahmed, Neisef, and Sami lack standing. In 21 response to the clear showing that the alleged property losses of these three plaintiffs occurred

22 ²² Two of the allegations highlight that plaintiffs' enterprise requires the government as a 23 member: (a) issuance of an Army report that directed the guard force to be "actively engaged in 24 setting the conditions for the successful exploitation of internees" and (b) control over the detention conditions in Abu Ghraib. See id.

25 ²³ As discussed in our opening brief, plaintiffs filed a falsified document to support the original 26 allegation that Team Titan was a collaboration between Titan and CACI to supply personnel to 27 Iraq. (Mot. 36-37 n.34). Remarkably, plaintiffs fail to respond to the falsity of their original 28 exhibit A and instead address only a third party's "concern about its reputation." (T. Opp. 5-6.)
That concern was based in part on the falsification that plaintiffs' counsel ignores: "We are unable to find any website that contains the false information you attach as Exhibit A to your Complaint." (T. Opp. Ex. G, Letter from Alion dated Jun. 15, 2004.)

1 before or during the arrests that led to their detention, plaintiffs now expand the Torture 2 Conspiracy to conduct outside of detention. (T. Opp. 32.) While this argument supports that 3 their detention was incident to combat and thus invokes the absolute bar of the military contractor 4 defense, it cannot cure the lack of proximate cause between Titan's alleged conduct during their 5 detention (the "Torture Conspiracy" they have pled) and pre-detention thefts.²⁴

6 Plaintiffs rely on Wagh v. Metris Direct, Inc., 363 F.3d 821 (9th Cir. 2003) to claim
7 standing under § 1962(a) and cite RCS ¶11(b) for the necessary allegations. (T. Opp. 34.) 8 Plaintiffs' RICO Case Statement says that, "[p]laintiffs allege that the income received from the 9 pattern of racketeering was used by Defendant Titan and CACI Corporate Defendants to invest in 10 and operate the ongoing operations of the corporations." (RCS ¶ 11(b).) This is not enough. As 11 the Wagh court clearly stated, "the acquisition and reinvestment of the proceeds of racketeering 12 activity in the general affairs of an enterprise" does not qualify as investment injury. Wagh, 363 13 F.3d at 829. Without a "direct causal link" between the funds from the predicate acts and 14 subsequent economic injury, plaintiffs' § 1962(a) claim must be dismissed. Id.

15 3. RICO Does Not Reach the Alleged Extraterritorial Conduct

16 Plaintiffs concede that RICO only applies if significant, furthering conduct occurred in the 17 United States or if foreign conduct caused substantial effects in the United States. (T. Opp. 35.)
18 Plaintiffs assert that the Ninth Circuit has found the conduct test satisfied where "parties held one 19 meeting in Los Angeles during which the defendants made misrepresentations," (T. Opp. 35, 20 citing Grunenthal GmbH v. Hotz, 712 F.2d 421, 424 (9th Cir. 1983)), and argue the alleged 21 domestic conduct here is of the same magnitude. The difference, however, is that Grunenthal 22 concerned alleged "misrepresentations in connection with an agreement to sell...stock." Id. at 23 ²⁴ Nor does plaintiff Sami's contention that he was "prevent[ed] from carrying on [his] on-going 24 business" provide standing. Although Diaz v. Gates, 380 F.3d 480, 484 (9th Cir. 2004) ("the 25 consequential damages of being deprived of [the] right 'to pursue gainful employment'" is not 26 economic loss under RICO), has been vacated and scheduled for en banc consideration, 2004 WL 27 2634566 (9th Cir. Nov. 18, 2004), Guerrero v. Gates, 357 F.3d 911, 920 (9th Cir. 2004) similarly 28 held that such allegations do not provide standing. The rationale of both cases, and distinguishing them from the two cases relied upon by plaintiffs, National Org. for Women, Inc. v. Scheidler, 510 U.S. 249 (1994) and Mendoza v. Zirkle Fruit Co., 301 F.3d 1163 (9th Cir. 2002), was that, as here, the injuries to business and property flowed from personal injuries for which there is no RICO claim.

1 422. A single meeting making the required misrepresentations, where “immediately thereafter 2 defendants signed and plaintiff was induced to execute the stock purchase agreement” met the 3 requirements. Id. at 425. The conduct in the United States constituted the alleged violation. Id.
4 Here, the alleged conduct in the United States (meetings, emails, etc.), was “merely preparatory” 5 and far removed from the alleged predicate acts in Iraq. See id. at 421.

6 On the effects side, plaintiffs do not dispute that Empagran is fatal to their position, but 7 dispute its applicability because it is “based on antitrust law, rather than securities fraud law, the 8 standard adopted by the Ninth Circuit in Butte Mining.” (T. Opp. 37.) Butte Mining did not state 9 that securities fraud was the only basis on which to evaluate the “effects test.” See Butte Mining 10 PLC v. Smith, 76 F.3d 287, 291-92 (9th Cir. 1996). Indeed, RICO was modeled on antitrust laws.
11 See Agency Holding Corp. v. Malley-Duff & Assoc., 483 U.S. 143, 150 (1987). Both securities 12 and antitrust law can be used to inform the RICO “effects” standard and the antitrust approach is 13 an “equally or even more appropriate test.” North South Fin. Corp. v. Al-Turki, 100 F.3d 1046, 14 1051-52 (2d Cir. 1996). In RICO, as in the antitrust laws, the domestic effect must injure the 15 foreign plaintiffs and give rise to a claim on their behalf. See F. Hoffmann LaRoche LTD v.
16 Empagran S.A., 124 S. Ct. 2359, 2369-72 (2004).²⁵

17 B. Plaintiffs Also Have No Claim Under the RFRA

18 Plaintiffs concede that RLUIPA does not create a cause of action against those acting 19 under color of United States law, but ask to amend their Complaint to add a claim under the 20 Religious Freedom Restoration Act (“RFRA”), 42 U.S.C. § 2000-bb-1. (T. Opp. 43). Since 21 RFRA has no extraterritorial application, Count XIV must still be dismissed.

22 Federal statutes do not apply extraterritorially unless Congress “clearly manifest[s]” such 23 an intent. Sale v. Haitian Ctrs. Council, Inc., 509 U.S. 155, 188 (1993); see also United States v.
24 Vasquez-Velasco, 15 F.3d 833, 839 n.4 (9th Cir. 1994). Neither the text of RFRA nor its 25 legislative history contains a “clear manifestation” of extraterritorial application, thus RFRA does

26 _____
27 ²⁵ Defendants attempt to further distinguish Butte Mining because the defendants were aliens. (T.
28 Opp. 36-37.) Empagran makes clear that the test is where the effects are felt, not the citizenship of the parties. See 124 S. Ct. at 2369-72.

1 not extend to Titan's alleged conduct in Iraq.²⁶ The presumption against extraterritoriality has 2 "special force" here because it would "involve foreign and military affairs for which the President 3 has unique responsibility." See Sale, 509 U.S. at 188.

4 C. No Private Right of Action Exists Under the Geneva Conventions

5 Plaintiffs argue that although federal courts are "divided" on whether the Geneva 6 Conventions are enforceable, they still enjoy "rights" under the Conventions because certain 7 provisions are self-executing. (C. Opp. 46-48). Plaintiffs fail to point to any authority for the 8 proposition that the Geneva Conventions create a private right of action against a non-signatory 9 such as Titan. Some courts have found that the Geneva Conventions create rights enforceable in 10 federal court against the United States and its officials, as demonstrated by the cases cited by the 11 Plaintiffs. The only court that has addressed the issue has held that the Geneva Conventions do 12 not create a right of action against private parties. See Handel v. Artukovic, 601 F. Supp. 1421, 13 1425 (C.D. Cal. 1985) (class action suit against private party where court held that "the Geneva 14 Convention does not offer plaintiffs a private right of action."). See also Hamdan v. Rumsfeld, 15 2004 WL 2504508, at *9 (D.D.C. Nov. 8, 2004) (finding the Geneva Convention enforceable 16 against the United States but distinguishing claims where the plaintiff asserts a "private right of 17 action.").

18 D. Plaintiffs Cannot Sue Based on Titan's Government Contract

19 Titan demonstrated in its opening brief that (1) there is no private right of action under 20 Contracting Laws; (2) plaintiffs lack standing to protest Titan's contract with the United States 21 because they did not participate in the procurement process; and (3) plaintiffs also lack standing 22 because they have failed to allege that they suffered any harm as the result of Titan's alleged 23 violation of Contracting Law. (Mot. 46-48). Titan also noted that the United States is an 24 indispensable party under Federal Rule of Civil Procedures 19(b). (Mot. 48 n.42). In response, 25 plaintiffs fail to point to any authority for the proposition that a private right of action exists under

26 _____
27 ²⁶ Military occupation did not extend U.S. law to Iraq. See Fleming v. Page, 50 U.S. 603, 615 28 (1850) ("[C]onquests do not enlarge the boundaries of this Union, nor extend the operation of our institutions and laws beyond the limits before assigned to them by the legislative power.").

1 Contracting Law, thereby effectively conceding this dispositive point and dooming Count XXV.
2 Compare Mot. 46-47 with T. Opp 37-40.

3 In addition, plaintiffs do not contest that only participants in the procurement process have 4 standing to sue. Compare Mot. 47-48 with T. Opp. 46-48. Nowhere in their pleadings do 5 plaintiffs allege that they were participants in the procurement process.

6 Finally, the only harm plaintiffs allege is that they “were injured by untrained CACI and 7 Titan employees attempting to perform inherently governmental functions in violation of the 8 FAR.” (T. Opp. 40.) Such injury is not fairly “traceable” to a Contracting Law violation.²⁷
