

1 Shayana Kadidal
Michael Ratner
2 CENTER FOR CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHTS
666 Broadway, 7th Floor
3 New York, NY 10012-2317
Phone: (212) 614-6438
4 Fax: (212) 614-6499
Email: kadidal@ccr-ny.org

5 David Cole
6 c/o Georgetown University Law Center
600 New Jersey Avenue, N.W.
7 Washington, D.C. 20001
Phone: (202) 662-9078

8 Michael Avery
9 J. Ashlee Albies
NATIONAL LAWYERS GUILD
10 c/o Suffolk Law School
120 Tremont Street
11 Boston, MA 02108
Phone: (617) 573-8551

12 Attorneys for Plaintiffs

13
14 UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
NORTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA
15 SAN FRANCISCO DIVISION

16
17 IN RE NATIONAL SECURITY AGENCY
TELECOMMUNICATIONS RECORDS
18 LITIGATION

19 This Document Relates Only to:
Center for Constitutional Rights v. Bush,
20 (Case No. 07-1115)

No. M:06-cv-01791-VRW

PLAINTIFFS' SUPPLEMENTAL MEMORANDUM IN SUPPORT OF
PLAINTIFFS' MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT AND IN OPPOSITION TO DEFENDANTS'
MOTION TO DISMISS in
*Center for Constitutional Rights v.
Bush (07-1115)

Judge: Hon. Vaughn R. Walker
Date: August 9, 2007
Time: 2 p.m.
Courtroom: 6, 17th Floor

24
25
26
27
28

TABLE OF CONTENTS

1
2
3
4
5
6
7
8
9
10
11
12
13
14
15
16
17
18
19 20
21
22
23
24
25
26
27
28

- INTRODUCTION .....1
- I. THIS CASE IS NOT MOOT .....2
- II. PLAINTIFFS HAVE STANDING TO SUE BASED ON THEIR WELL-FOUNDED FEAR THAT THEIR COMMUNICATIONS HAVE BEEN AND WILL BE SUBJECT TO NSA WARRANTLESS SURVEILLANCE .....10
  - A. Plaintiffs have established injury-in-fact.....12
  - B. Plaintiffs have established causation .....16
  - C. Fourth Amendment first principles further establish injury .....19
  - D. Plaintiffs have shown the Program constitutes “electronic surveillance” under FISA .....23
  - E. Plaintiffs’ APA claims are actionable.....25
- CONCLUSION.....26

1     INTRODUCTION

2             This supplemental brief addresses two developments that post-date the original briefs filed
3 in this matter. First, the government argues that because President Bush claimed to have terminated
4 the NSA’s warrantless wiretapping program in January of this year, this challenge is now moot.
5 Second, on July 6, 2007, a divided panel of the Sixth Circuit concluded that plaintiffs in another 6 case challenging the NSA surveillance program lacked standing to bring that challenge. ACLU v.
7 NSA, 2007 WL 1952370 (6th Cir. Jul. 6, 2007). In this brief, we demonstrate that this case is not 8 moot, because Defendants have repeatedly asserted the right to reinstate the NSA program at any 9 point, and therefore cannot meet the heavy burden of establishing mootness through voluntary
10 cessation of challenged conduct. We also show that the two Sixth Circuit judges who separately
11 concluded that the ACLU plaintiffs lacked standing fundamentally misconstrued the relevant 12 precedents, which establish that a well-founded fear of being subjected to harmful government 13 conduct is sufficient to establish standing, particularly where, as here, the targeted threat of such 14 conduct does as much injury as the illegal conduct itself.
15

16
17             The government is at pains to keep the courts from addressing the legality of the President’s 18 surveillance program. We have addressed the merits at length in our previous briefs and urge this 19 Court for the reasons set forth therein to issue a declaratory judgment and an injunction forbidding 20 the President and the NSA from engaging in further illegal surveillance. Given that plaintiffs have 21 alleged serious irreparable harm, this litigation has been permitted to go on far too long without a
22 resolution. Plaintiffs filed their motion for summary judgment on March 9, 2006 and the matter
23 was argued before the district court in New York on September 5, 2006. Where a President 24 engages in unconstitutional actions that are also clearly proscribed by specific statutes, the judicial 25 branch has a constitutional duty to act promptly to declare that such conduct is in violation of law
26 and to enjoin it. See Marbury v. Madison, 5 U.S. 137 (1803).
27
28

---

1
2 I. THIS CASE IS NOT MOOT

3 Long after this case was filed, and shortly before a similar case was to be argued before the 4 Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals, the government announced that President Bush would not 5 reauthorize the NSA warrantless wiretapping program, because the government had succeeded in 6 obtaining an order under the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act allowing similar surveillance to 7 be conducted under that Act. The government contends that as a result, this challenge to the 8 NSA’s warrantless surveillance program is moot. That argument, however, fails, because 9 defendants cannot meet the heavy burden of demonstrating that the NSA program will not be 10 reinstated in the future.
11

12 A party may not evade judicial review of questionable conduct by voluntarily ceasing such 13 conduct during review. See, e.g., City of Mesquite v. Aladdin’s Castle, Inc., 455 U.S. 283, 289
14 (1982). “It is well settled that ‘a defendant’s voluntary cessation of a challenged practice does not 15 deprive a federal court of its power to determine the legality of the practice.’” Friends of the Earth,
16 Inc. v. Laidlaw Env’tl. Servs. (TOC), Inc., 528 U.S. 167, 174 (2000) (quoting City of Mesquite, 455 17 U.S. at 289.). Otherwise, a party would be free to resume the conduct after a challenge was 18 dismissed as moot, id. at 189, as “courts would be compelled to leave ‘the defendant free to return
19 to his old ways,’” United States v. Concentrated Phosphate Export Assn., Inc., 393 U.S. 199, 203
20 (1968) (quoting United States v. W.T. Grant Co., 345 U.S. 629, 632 (1953)).
21

22 To guard against such intentional avoidance of judicial review, the party asserting mootness 23 bears the “‘heavy burden of persuading’ the court that the challenged conduct cannot reasonably be 24 expected to start up again.” Id. (quoting United States v. Concentrated Phosphate Export Assn., 25 Inc., 393 U.S. 199, 203 (1968)). The “stringent” burden on a party asserting mootness is to show 26 that “subsequent events made it absolutely clear that the alleged wrongful behavior could not 27 reasonably be expected to recur.” Id. (quoting Concentrated Phosphate, 393 U.S. at 203); Laidlaw,

1 528 U.S. at 190 (“formidable burden”); Parents Involved in Community Schools v. Seattle School
2 Dist. No. 1, No. 05-908, Slip Op. at 11, 2007 WL 1836531 at *10 (U.S. June 28, 2007) (“heavy 3 burden”).

4 The government cannot possibly meet this heavy burden, given its continued insistence that 5 the NSA Program was and continues to be entirely legal, that the President may reauthorize it in 6 the event that the FISA court orders are not renewed,<sup>1</sup> and that he may indeed opt out of the regime
7 created by the new FISA orders at any time he pleases. The government insists it has both the right
8 and the duty to carry out such warrantless surveillance whenever circumstances demand it.

9 Administration officials still adamantly insist that the Program challenged in this lawsuit,
10 one that took place outside of the FISA Court’s “supervision,” “guidelines and rules,”<sup>2</sup> was 11 perfectly legal and remains so. Attorney General Gonzales testified before Congress that “[w]e 12 believed, and believe today, that what the President is doing is lawful” and that his “belief is ... that 13 the actions taken by this administration, by this President, were lawful in the past.” Hearing before 14 the Senate Judiciary Committee on Department of Justice Oversight (January 18, 2007) (available 15 on LEXIS) at 25, 29.<sup>3</sup>

16 Indeed, notwithstanding the government’s implication that the Program is no longer in 17 effect because it was allowed to lapse without being reauthorized,<sup>4</sup> the government asserts the right
18 to carry out surveillance under the terms of the Program challenged in this lawsuit at any time. See 19 Press Briefing, Jan. 17, 2007 (Q: “...the President has always argued that—I mean, [that] he has the 20
21
22

---

23 <sup>1</sup> In Parents Involved, the Supreme Court last week relied on the facts that the Seattle School District, a 24 governmental body, “vigorously defends the constitutionality” of the school assignment program it had ceased using,
25 “and nowhere suggests that if this litigation is resolved in its favor it will not resume” the challenged practice. Parents
Involved, Slip Op. at 10-11. Both factors are present here. It is thus anything but clear that the government’s wrongful conduct “could not reasonably be expected to recur.” Id. at 11.

26 <sup>2</sup> See Tony Snow, White House Press Briefing, Jan. 17, 2007 (described infra, page 7).

27 <sup>3</sup> See also Letter from Attorney General Alberto Gonzales to Senators Leahy and Specter, Jan. 17, 2007
[“Gonzales Letter”], available at http://graphics8.nytimes.com/packages/pdf/politics/20060117gonzales\_Letter.pdf, at ¶3 (“as we have previously explained, the Terrorist Surveillance Program fully complies with the law”).

28 <sup>4</sup> See, e.g., Snow Press Briefing (Snow: “I don’t know exactly how the handoff works .... I don’t know at what point this takes effect.”).

1 ability, he has the authority not to ... use FISA to get authority” ... White House Spokesman Snow:
2 “Yes, and he still believes that.”); Gov’t Reply Br. in Support of Supplemental Submissions, ACLU
3 v. NSA, Nos. 06-2095, 06-2140 (6th Cir. Jan. 30, 2007) at 5 (“the president has not disavowed his 4 authority to reauthorize the TSP in the event that the FISA court orders are not renewed.”);
5 Hearing On The Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Modernization Act of 2007, Senate Intelligence
6 Committee (May 1, 2007) (Sen. Feingold: “Can each of you assure the American people ... that 7 there is not and will not be any more surveillance in which the FISA process is side-stepped based 8 on arguments that the president has independent authority under Article II or the authorization of 9 the use of military force?” / DNI Michael McConnell: “Sir, the president’s authority under Article
10 II is—are in the Constitution. So if the president chose to exercise Article II authority, that would 11 be the president’s call.”).

12
13
14 In fact the government has repeatedly claimed that the President not only has the right to 15 carry out such surveillance outside of FISA under the proper circumstances, but that he has the 16 duty to do so. See, e.g., Defs. Reply in Suppt. of MTD, Dkt. 68, at 37, 36 (factual context of 17 Program would show why “normal FISA process would not be sufficient and would therefore 18 intrude on the President’s responsibility to protect the nation”; “the President’s most basic duty is 19 to protect the nation from attack” (emphasis added)); Appellant’s Br. [corrected unclassified 20 version], ACLU v. NSA, Nos.06-2095, 06-2140 (6th Cir. Oct. 16, 2006), at 46 (“If FISA were 21 construed to bar the TSP, it would be an unconstitutional encroachment on the Executive’s 22 constitutional authority (and duty) to gather foreign intelligence....”).

23
24 Nowhere in its brief does the government come close to stating that it will not resurrect the 25 Program, assuming it has not done so already. In several colloquies before the Sixth Circuit, the 26 government agreed with the Court that it could in fact opt out of the FISA court orders at any time, 27 or indeed conduct surveillance outside of FISA even while the FISA Court orders were in effect.
28

1 See ACLU v. NSA, Slip Op. at 52 (Gilman, J., dissenting); Audio File of Argument<sup>5</sup> at 18’45”
2 (Judge Gillman: “But [you can] opt out of the FISA regime whenever you decide to, couldn’t you?
3 The FISA court hasn’t restrained you from doing that.” Coppelino: “That’s absolutely true, Your 4 Honor...”); Audio File at 19’53” (Judge Batchelder: “Those aren’t the only possibilities. I mean,
5 the possibility also exists, theoretically, at least, that the FISA court would be perfectly willing to 6 reauthorize but that the Executive would nevertheless decide to conduct some surveillance outside
7 the FISA court jurisdiction and parameters.” Coppelino: “That is true, Your Honor. That is a
8 hypothetical possibility...”). Attorney General Gonzales’ letter to Senators Leahy and Specter 9 indicates that only after determining that the FISA Court orders “allow the necessary speed and 10 agility” did the President decide he would comply with them by allowing the Program’s
11 authorization to lapse. Gonzales Letter at ¶13.<sup>6</sup> In every respect, then, it appears that the decision to 12 let the NSA Program’s authorization lapse was matter of executive grace, and that any decision to 13 revive it may be taken at any time as matter of executive discretion.
14
15

16 Rather than attempting to meet the heavy burden imposed by the voluntary cessation cases, 17 the government argues that this is not a voluntary cessation case at all—because it “has not 18 terminated its conduct in response to Plaintiffs’ suit; instead it worked with the FISA Court to 19 obtain authorization for surveillance activities that now supplant the TSP.” Gov’t Supp. Br. at 13
20 lines 13-15. This argument is not supported by the factual history of this matter, which we recount 21 briefly below.
22
23
24

---

25 <sup>5</sup> An audio file of the argument is available at <http://www.eff.org/legal/cases/att/ACLUappealargument.mp3> or http://www.ca6.uscourts.gov/internet/06\_2095/06\_2095.mp3

26 <sup>6</sup> On January 22, plaintiffs in ACLU v. NSA asked the government to stipulate that it would comply with the 27 district court injunction in that case, see 438 F. Supp. 2d 754, 782 (E.D. Mich. 2006), which prohibits electronic 28 surveillance in contravention of FISA. The government refused, stating that “the district court’s injunction is not only unprecedented but entirely unfounded,” and thereby confirming that it continues to regard FISA’s injunction that it constitutes the “exclusive means” for carrying out electronic surveillance as an optional commandment, to be obeyed only at the grace of the President. See Pl.-Appellee’s Resp. to Defs. Supp. Br., ACLU v. NSA (Jan. 26, 2007), Ex. B.

1 In January 2006, the President claimed that it was not “possible to conduct this program
2 under the old law”<sup>7</sup>—FISA—and in May of 2006 Defendants in this action asserted that:

3 the President has determined that the current threat to the United States demands
4 that signals intelligence be carried out with a speed and methodology that cannot be 5 achieved by seeking judicial approval through the traditional FISA process ... but 6 evidence demonstrating why this is so cannot be disclosed without causing grave
7 harm to national security.

8 [REDACTED TEXT]

9 The foregoing evidence would show that, in a wartime situation, in which 10 swift and decisive action in collecting intelligence may spell the difference between 11 a thwarted attack and another 3,000 or more deaths, the President’s decision to cede 12 control over this vital intelligence collection effort to the potential delays and 13 uncertainties of a judicial process is well-supported and constitutional.

14 Defs. Mem. in Suppt. of MTD, Dkt. 31,<sup>8</sup> at 38.

15 However, on January 17, 2007, two weeks<sup>9</sup> before scheduled oral argument in the Sixth
16 Circuit in the first challenge to the NSA program’s legality to reach the Courts of Appeals,<sup>10</sup> the 17 administration claims it did in fact “cede control” over the Program to the Foreign Intelligence
18 Surveillance Court. According to Attorney General Gonzales, a single FISC Judge issued a number 19 of orders:

20 authorizing the Government to target for collection international communications 21 into or out of the United States where there is probable cause to believe that one of 22 the communicants is a member or agent of al Qaeda or an associated terrorist 23 organization. As a result of these orders, any electronic surveillance that was 24 occurring as a part of the Terrorist Surveillance Program will now be conducted 25 subject to the approval of the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Court.

26 Gonzales Letter at ¶ 1. Because the new FISA surveillance regime “allow[s] the necessary speed

27 <sup>7</sup> See <http://www.whitehouse.gov/news/releases/2006/01/20060126.html>

28 <sup>8</sup> All references to docket numbers (“Dkt.”) in this brief are to docket numbers assigned to filings in the Southern District of New York case, No. 06-cv-313.

<sup>9</sup> Although Defendants imply that the timing was coincidental, claiming two years were consumed in the application and approval of the orders, they have never broken down how much of the two years was spent on musing over the form of the application and how long the application spent before the judge before it was approved, making it quite possible that the applications were submitted shortly before their approval. See Gonzales Letter (“it took considerable time and work for the Government to develop the approach that was proposed to the Court and for the Judge on the FISC to consider and approve these orders.”); Tony Snow, White House Press Briefing, Jan. 17, 2007 (dating to 2005 “the thought that perhaps one ought to see if it was possible” to seek FISA approval, but failing to specify when application to the FISA court was made (emphasis added)); Press Phone Briefing by Senior DOJ Officials, Jan. 17, 2007, <http://www.tpmuckraker.com/archives/002361.php> (“These orders, however, are orders that have taken a long time to put together, to work on. They’re orders that take advantage of use of the use of the FISA statute and developments in the law .... before the FISA court.”).

<sup>10</sup> ACLU v. NSA, Nos. 06-2095, 06-2140 (6th Cir., argued Jan 31, 2007).

1 and agility while providing substantial”—though unspecified—“advantages,” the “President has
2 determined not to reauthorize the Terrorist Surveillance Program when the current authorization 3 expires,” whenever that may be.

4 According to the government, the Program continues, but under unspecified forms of 5 oversight and limiting regulations imposed by the FISA court. White House Press Secretary Tony 6 Snow announced that “the program pretty much continues,” but

8 [t]he FISA Court has published the rules under which such activities may be 9 conducted. ... the program continues, but it continues under the rules that have been laid out by the [C]ourt.

10 Tony Snow, White House Press Briefing, Jan. 17, 2007 (available at [http://www.whitehouse.gov/
11 news/releases/2007/01/print/20070117-5.html](http://www.whitehouse.gov/news/releases/2007/01/print/20070117-5.html)). Snow added that the Program would now “proceed
12 with the ... supervision of the FISC” under “guidelines and rules” issued by the Court in situations 13 “[w]here there is probable cause to believe that one of the communicants is a member or agent of 14 al Qaeda or an associate terrorist organization.” Id. (misquoting Gonzales Letter).

16 While the government claims it sought to develop the new approach as far back as “the 17 Spring of 2005—well before the first press account disclosing”<sup>11</sup> the Program’s existence (although 18 well after the administration was aware that the New York Times knew of the Program and might 19 someday disclose it<sup>12</sup>), it nowhere indicates precisely when application was made to the FISA
20 court.<sup>13</sup> The only explanation offered for the suspect timing of the orders was that the “orders are 21 innovative, they are complex, and it took considerable time and work for the Government to 22 develop the approach that was proposed to the Court and for the Judge on the FISC to consider and 23 approve these orders.”<sup>14</sup>

---

26 <sup>11</sup> Gonzales Letter at ¶2.

27 <sup>12</sup> See Byron Calame, Eavesdropping and the Election: An Answer on the Question of Timing, New York Times
(Aug. 13, 2006).

28 <sup>13</sup> See footnote 2, supra.

<sup>14</sup> Gonzales Letter at ¶2.

1           Given this history, it is clear that the government is not simply responding to the fact that
2 “[a]n independent judicial body—the FISA Court—has now acted to provide additional and 3 sufficient legal authority for the activity that Plaintiffs challenged.” Gov’t Supp. Br. at 13 lines 12-
4 13. On the contrary, the government itself had to affirmatively seek the FISA orders it now
5 invokes.<sup>15</sup> Under the terms of the FISA statute it will have to seek periodic renewals of these 6 orders, and in fact likely has already been forced to do so.<sup>16</sup> Under those same terms, any FISA
7 orders are subject to minimization requirements.<sup>17</sup> Only after determining that the new FISC orders
8 “allow the necessary speed and agility” did the President decide he would not reauthorize the NSA
9 Program, Gonzales Letter at ¶3; cf. Gov’t Supp Br. at 13 lines 22-24. That decision to rely on the 10 orders rather than revert to judicially-unsupervised surveillance is subject to reconsideration at any 11 time, as the government has repeatedly acknowledged. In addition, the FISA orders are by 12 definition temporary in duration, as required by statute and by the constitution. See 50 U.S.C.
13 § 1805(e)(1) (“An order issued under this section may approve an electronic surveillance for the 14 period necessary to achieve its purpose, or for ninety days, whichever is less,” with exceptions 15 allowing lengthier surveillance of communications between foreign powers and from premises of 16
17
18

---

19 <sup>15</sup> See Audio File of Oral Argument at 18’11”, ACLU v. NSA (Coppolino: “it’s certainly true that the government 20 applied in accordance with the FISA process”).

21 <sup>16</sup> FISA orders generally are capped in duration at 90 days or less. See 50 U.S.C. § 1805(e)(1).

22 <sup>17</sup> The absence of judicially-supervised minimization measures from the NSA Program gives the lie to the 23 government’s argument that it has not in fact ceased its previous conduct. The government’s argument that no
24 cessation has occurred is predicated on the notion that the basic surveillance conduct it is carrying out has not
25 changed—that it is still carrying out an identical program of surveillance—and that the FISA court orders simply 26 provide an “additional” legal basis for the previous conduct. But the FISA statute mandates that minimization measures
27 be implemented in every FISC order. See 50 U.S.C. § 1801(h) (defining required “minimization” procedures); 28 § 1804(a)(5) (application must set forth “proposed minimization procedures”); § 1805(a)(4) (minimization procedures in any FISA order must meet requirements of § 1801(h)); see also id. § 1806(a) (“[n]o otherwise privileged communication obtained in accordance with, or in violation of, the provisions of this subchapter shall lose its privileged character”). These statutory minimization provisions were created by Congress to implement the constitutional particularity requirement for wiretapping warrants. See Pls’ Opp. to MTD, Dkt. 56, at 11 n.8; cf. Berger
v. United States, 388 U.S. 41, 55-60 (1967) (setting forth constitutional concerns underlying modern minimization requirement). By definition, any surveillance compliant with any valid orders lawfully issued by the FISA court must be implemented with judicially-supervised minimization in place. Whatever the precise content of the FISA orders, then, the surveillance activities the government is undertaking pursuant to the new orders are necessarily different than those that came before.

1 foreign powers (e.g. embassies) pursuant to § 1802(a)(1)); Pls. Opp. to MTD, Dkt. 56, at 12 (citing
2 authority re. constitutional dimension of ongoing judicial oversight over time). Given the 3 government’s insistence that both the NSA Program and FISA orders remain secret, Plaintiffs,
4 those who communicate with Plaintiffs, and the public will have no way of knowing whether and
5 when the FISA orders expire or the President reauthorizes non-FISA surveillance.<sup>18</sup>

6
7 Because its voluntary cessation argument has no merit, the government sets up a strawman
8 to attack by focusing on the “capable of repetition, yet evading review” exception to mootness and 9 eliding the distinction between it and voluntary cessation. In so doing, the government attempts to 10 flip its “heavy burden” of showing that it is “absolutely clear that the allegedly wrongful behavior
11 could not reasonably be expected to recur,” Laidlaw, 528 U.S. at 189-90 (quotation marks 12 omitted), and attempts to put the burden on Plaintiffs to “‘demonstrate[ the] probability’ that the 13 same controversy will recur involving the same party.” Gov’t Supp. Br. at 14 lines 19-20. This 14 gets it exactly backwards. Under the voluntary cessation doctrine it is the government<sup>19</sup> that must 15 show that the conduct could not reasonably be expected to recur.
16

17
18 <sup>18</sup> The government argues in a footnote that this court should invoke the prudential mootness doctrine, allowing 19 courts to dismiss suits “not actually moot, [but] so attenuated that considerations of prudence and comity for coordinate
20 branches of government counsel [the] court to stay its hand and to withhold relief it has the power to grant.” Gov’t
21 Supp. Br. at 15 n.10 (citing Chamber of Commerce v. DOE, 627 F.2d 289, 291 (D.C. Cir. 1980) (per curiam)). Given 22 Defendants’ repeated assertions that the NSA Program was entirely legal, that the President may reauthorize it in the event that the FISA court orders are not renewed, or indeed opt out of the FISA regime whenever he pleases, this case is clearly anything but “attenuated.” The Supreme Court has stated that, in considering whether to utilize equitable power to enjoin future violations, a court should consider whether there exists “some cognizable danger of recurrent violation, something more than the mere possibility which serves to keep the case alive.” W.T. Grant, 345 U.S. at 633.
Obviously, for reasons cited above, such a danger is very much present here.

23 In contrast, in three of the four cases cited by the government, the challenged activity was unlikely to recur.
24 See Greenbaum v. EPA, 370 F.3d 527, 534-35 (6th Cir. 2004); Chamber of Commerce, 627 F.2d at 292; Ali v.
Cangemi, 419 F.3d 722, 724 (8th Cir. 2005). In the fourth, Southern Utah Wilderness Alliance v. Smith, the court found 25 it lacked Article III standing, which of course leaves the question of prudential mootness moot. See 110 F.3d 724, 728
(10th Cir. 1997). Lack of redressability was also an issue in Greenbaum, 370 F.3d at 534, and in Ali, 419 F.3d at 724.

26 <sup>19</sup> In a supplemental reply brief submitted the day before oral argument in the Sixth Circuit, the government 27 argued that ordinary voluntary cessation principles should not be applied by federal courts against other branches of the federal government, for to do so would “impute ... manipulative conduct to a coordinate branch of government, or ...
28 apply against that branch a doctrine that appears to rest on the likelihood of a manipulative purpose,” Clarke v. United States, 915 F.2d 699, 705 (D.C. Cir. 1990) (en banc) (dicta). The government appears to have abandoned that argument here.

In any event, the language in Clarke is dicta. The Court said it “need not decide the issue” because the

1           The government cannot do so here. Facts in the public record compel the conclusion that 2 the government has altered its behavior—by seeking (and presumably renewing) approvals from 3 the FISA Court and choosing to operate under the strictures imposed by that court—and thereby
4 has temporarily voluntarily ceased its offending activity. Yet in statement after statement
5 administration officials have maintained that they have the right and the duty to reinstitute the 6 warrantless surveillance program at any time, even while the new FISA court orders remain in 7 effect. The Program thus hangs over the heads of Plaintiffs in exactly the same manner as it did
8 after the President’s initial announcement of December 17, 2005. The threat posed by such 9 judicially-unsupervised surveillance, and the consequent harm from the measures Plaintiffs must 10 take to protect the confidentiality of their communications, is precisely what underlies Plaintiffs’
11 claims to standing in this case.
12
13

14       II. PLAINTIFFS HAVE STANDING TO SUE BASED ON THEIR WELL-FOUNDED
15       FEAR THAT THEIR COMMUNICATIONS HAVE BEEN AND WILL BE
16       SUBJECT TO NSA WARRANTLESS SURVEILLANCE

17           On July 6, a divided panel of the Sixth Circuit held that plaintiffs in a similar challenge to 18 the NSA Program lacked standing to bring that challenge. The Sixth Circuit’s analysis, however, is 19 fundamentally flawed, for many of the reasons already set forth in Plaintiffs’ initial briefs.<sup>20</sup> The

---

20 challenged Act of Congress had been set to expire on a date certain that had been established well before the litigation
21 ever commenced; thus the Court found no “voluntary” cessation had occurred during the pendency of the litigation. It
22 is self-evidently speculative dicta at that (“it would seem inappropriate” to impute bad faith to another branch, id.). It is 23 therefore not the law in the D.C. circuit, and it has not been adopted by either the Second or Ninth Circuits. (In the
ACLU litigation the government cited only one other D.C. Circuit case, National Black Police Ass’n v. District of Columbia, 108 F.3d 346, 352 (D.C. Cir. 1997), which invokes Clarke in a vacatur analysis.)

24           Moreover, Clarke’s dictum is poorly considered. Its reasoning could equally apply to any branch of 25 government, including state or local entities, yet the Supreme Court has frequently applied the exception to such 26 governmental bodies. Diplomatic comity concerns for embarrassing branches of foreign governments are not 27 implicated here. And the Framers certainly believed that each coordinate branch of the federal government would be 28 well advised to impute bad faith to the others.

29           Finally, the timing of the administration’s public announcement of these FISA orders (orders whose very existence would ordinarily be kept secret), just before the first appellate consideration of the NSA Program’s legality, 30 gives every indication that it was intended to preempt appellate review in the Sixth Circuit.

31           <sup>20</sup> Plaintiffs’ standing arguments are set forth (primarily) in Pls. Opp. to MTD, Dkt. 56, at 2-13, 32-33, and Pls.
32 Reply in Suppt. of Summary Judgment, Dkt. 74, at 1-8, and in the oral argument before Judge Lynch, Oral Arg. Tr. at 33 16-37, 52-53.

1 Sixth Circuit primarily concluded that unless plaintiffs could show that they were currently subject
2 to NSA surveillance, they could not have standing to challenge the program. But that conclusion is 3 contrary to binding precedent in this Court, is predicated on a fundamental misunderstanding of the 4 nature of plaintiffs' injuries, and is in any event not binding here.

5
6 The Sixth Circuit decision resulted in three separate opinions; therefore no one opinion
7 constitutes the opinion of the court. Nonetheless Judges Batchelder and Gibbons both seem to have 8 predicated their conclusion on a determination that one must actually prove that one is subject to 9 illegal surveillance in order to challenge that surveillance. That reasoning is not compelled by any 10 Supreme Court case, and is directly contrary to precedent in this Court. In United Presbyterian 11 Church (USA) v. United States, 870 F.2d 518 (9th Cir. 1989), this Court held that a church had 12 standing to challenge an INS surveillance program on the ground that the threat of surveillance 13 targeted at the church had chilled congregants from participating in the church's services and 14 activities. Id. at 522. As Plaintiffs have already argued, see Pls. Opp. to MTD, Dkt. 56, 4 n.2 and 15 7-8, Plaintiffs here are in an analogous position. Like the church's congregants, Plaintiffs' clients
16 are chilled from participating with CCR in its litigation challenging various aspects of the 17 government's "war on terror" initiatives. In addition, Plaintiffs themselves, as attorneys subject to 18 ethical duties, are unable to communicate freely by phone or email with persons overseas,
19 including their own clients, who the government believes fit within the terms of the NSA program.
20 Under United Presbyterian Church, Plaintiffs have standing to sue, and while that case may not 21 have been binding on the Sixth Circuit, it is controlling here.<sup>21</sup>

22
23
24
25 _____
26 <sup>21</sup> Judge Batchelder sought to distinguish UPC on the ground that the church invoked "organizational standing."
27 Slip Op. at 16-17. But she offers no rationale for that purported distinction. It makes no sense, for the constitutional 28 requirements of standing apply equally to individuals and organizations. And even if it made any sense as a logical matter, Plaintiff CCR is an organizational Plaintiff and has alleged harm to itself. See Pls. Opp. to MTD, Dkt. 56, at 4
n.2; Goodman Affirmation, Dkt. 9, at ¶ 19 ("In short, we have had to divert staff time and organizational resources away from core mission tasks in order to respond to the NSA Program"). Contrast ACLU v. NSA, Slip Op. at 17, 17 n.28 ("None of the plaintiffs have alleged any 'organizational injury' in the present context").

1 A. Plaintiffs have established injury-in-fact

2 Judge Batchelder also argues that Laird v. Tatum, 408 U.S. 1 (1972), requires that 3 government action be “regulatory, prescriptive, or compulsory” in order to establish injury-in-fact
4 on a chilling-effect theory of standing (Slip. Op. at 12-16). This argument was previously raised by 5 the government in our case,<sup>22</sup> and is thoroughly addressed in Plaintiffs’ Summary Judgment Reply
6 (Dkt. 74) at pages 1-4. The notion that the “challenged exercise of government power [must be]
7 regulatory, proscriptive, or compulsory in nature” comes from a section of the Laird opinion where 8 the court was merely cataloging older cases, 408 U.S. at 11; the Court goes on from there to 9 discuss the many other factors in the case at hand that were dispositive—primarily the fact that 10 plaintiffs were not actually chilled,<sup>23</sup> and the nebulous nature of plaintiffs’ fear that the government
11 might in the future do something illegal with the otherwise lawfully-gathered information it was 12 accumulating. Judge Batchelder’s reading of this language from Laird is directly refuted<sup>24</sup> by 13 United Presbyterian Church, 870 F.2d at 522 (rejecting argument that government intrusion must 14 reach the level of “coercive action” before standing may be found in chill cases).
15

16
17 Just as United Presbyterian Church fatally undermines the central contention of Judge 18 Batchelder’s standing analysis, it undermines the central holding of Judge Gibbons’ as well. United 19 Presbyterian Church read Laird to permit standing where, as here, plaintiffs face a credible threat
20 of surveillance and it has an effect on their constitutionally protected activities. See 870 F.2d at 21 522-23. The linchpin of Judge Gibbons’ opinion was the notion that plaintiffs cannot establish 22

23 <sup>22</sup> See Defs. Br. in Suppt. of MTD, Dkt. 31, at 19, 22 n.9; Defs. Reply in Suppt. of MTD, Dkt. 68, at 4-7.

24 <sup>23</sup> Judge Batchelder seems to have missed this point about Laird. Cf. Slip Op. at 12 (“The plaintiffs in Laird
25 were political activists and the speech chilled was political speech.”); cf. Tatum v. Laird, 444 F.2d 947, 959 (D.C. Cir.
26 1971) (MacKinnon, J., concurring in part) (“In the hearing before the trial judge, counsel admitted that in the facts upon which they based their complaint the named plaintiffs were not aggrieved by the acts of the appellees: ‘Our 27 Plaintiffs this morning, for example, are not people, obviously, who are cowed and chilled...’”); Pls. Opp. to MTD,
Dkt. 56, at 7 n.4 (same).

28 <sup>24</sup> See also Initiative & Referendum Inst. v. Walker, 450 F.3d 1082, 1096 (10th Cir. 2006) (en banc) (McConnell, J.) (cited in Pls. SJ Reply, Dkt. 74, at 1-2). Moreover, at oral argument in the Southern District of New York, Judge Lynch agreed that this was clearly not the holding of Laird, see Oral Arg. Tr. 27 line 3 (“THE COURT: I’m with you

1 standing unless they are “clearly subject to conduct of the defendant about which the plaintiffs
2 complained.” Slip. Op. at 38. But in United Presbyterian Church, the Ninth Circuit granted
3 standing to seek prospective relief on the basis of the effect that the reasonable fear of future
4 surveillance would have on plaintiffs, as here. Thus, the central rationales of both Judge Gibbons
5 and Judge Batchelder cannot stand in this Court, because they cannot be squared with the binding
6 precedent of United Presbyterian Church.
7

8 Judge Gibbons relies on City of Los Angeles v. Lyons, 461 U.S. 95 (1983), for the 9 proposition that fear of being subjected to a future injury is insufficient to ground standing to sue.
10 But that clearly overreads Lyons. The Court in Lyons held only that where a citizen was subjected 11 in the past to a chokehold that was admittedly wholly unauthorized and violated city policy, he 12 lacked standing to sue for prospective relief because it was speculative that plaintiff would again 13 engage in activity that caused the police to stop him, and that the police would again engage in 14 action directly contrary to city policy. The Court expressly noted that it would be different if the 15 police were acting pursuant to city policy, because then the likelihood of future injury would be far 16 less speculative. Id. at 106 n.7. Here, the President himself authorized the NSA Program; it was not 17 the isolated act of a rogue NSA officer. Moreover, the Program is targeted at precisely the kinds of 18 individuals that Plaintiffs communicate with regularly in connection with their litigation. And 19 unlike in Lyons, there is no need for Plaintiffs to violate the law to be subjected to this policy.
20 Accordingly, Lyons supports Plaintiffs’ standing here. If the City of Los Angeles had a stated 21 policy of targeting black motorists for chokeholds, Mr. Lyons would plainly have had standing to 22 challenge that policy. Here, the administration put in place a formal policy to target international 23 communications with persons they deem to have some connection to al Qaeda or affiliated groups.
24
25
26
27

---

28 on that.”), and Judge Gibbons’ ACLU opinion expresses extreme skepticism about Judge Batchelder’s reading, see Slip
Op. at 39 n.3.

1 Because Plaintiffs’ clients and witnesses fall directly within the targeted terms of the government’s
2 program, they have standing to challenge the program.

3 Standing for prospective relief always requires proof of the threat of future injury, and past
4 injury is relevant only to the extent that it may make it more reasonable to infer a likelihood of 5 future injury. But Lyons stands squarely for the proposition that past injury is not sufficient; a
6 reasonable threat of future injury is required to establish standing. Thus, the Sixth Circuit’s focus
7 on whether plaintiffs had been subject to actual (past) surveillance was misguided, as their claim
8 for prospective relief required instead an assessment of whether future injury was sufficiently 9 likely. This type of assessment is familiar to courts determining standing to litigate pre-
10 enforcement challenges to criminal statutes affecting protected speech. See, e.g., California Pro-
11 Life Council v. Getman, 328 F.3d 1088, 1095 (9th Cir. 2003) (“particularly in the First 12 Amendment-protected speech context, the Supreme Court has dispensed with rigid standing 13 requirements ... [but] the self-censorship door to standing does not open for every plaintiff. The 14 potential Plaintiff must have ‘an actual and well-founded fear that the law will be enforced against 15 [him or her].’” (citation omitted)); id. (pre-enforcement First Amendment plaintiff “‘need not show 16 that the authorities have threatened to prosecute him; the threat is latent in the existence of the 17 statute. Not if it clearly fails to cover his conduct, of course. But if it arguably covers it ... there is 18 standing.’” (quoting Majors v. Abell, 317 F.3d 719, 721 (7th Cir. 2003))). Even outside of the First
19 Amendment context, the Supreme Court has time and again stated that the threat of future injury
20 can underlie standing. See, e.g., Lyons, 461 U.S. at 101-02. Future injury is by definition
21 contingent, regardless of what past injuries have taken place. It will always require a court’s 22 judgment to determine which fears of future injury are reasonable and which are not. It cannot be 23 the law that, as a hard-and-fast rule, past surveillance is necessary to underlie a claim for relief
24 against the threat of future unlawful surveillance.
25
26
27
28

1 Both Judge Batchelder’s and Judge Gibbons’ opinions suffer from the same basic flaw: a
2 desire to turn the standing inquiry into a formulaic analysis. But the Supreme Court’s standing
3 cases have consistently been anything but formulaic.<sup>25</sup> Much of the mischief has been wrought by 4 Laird’s cautionary language that “subjective chill, without more” should not be the basis for 5 standing. Laird and subsequent chilling effect cases show a concern about the “objectivity” of two 6 elements of the standing analysis: first, that the fear causing plaintiffs to be deterred from acting 7 should be objectively reasonable; and second, that the harm asserted be something tangible—what 8 is referred to as “concrete harm” in the many post-Laird Supreme Court pronouncements on 9 standing—and therefore objective in that sense. See Oral Arg. Tr. at 27-28. Where either the fear or 10 the harm are overly subjective, Laird applies. But where plaintiffs can produce evidence of the 11 objective reasonableness of their fears resulting from government action, and can also point to 12 consequent objective harm (such as the “professional” harm<sup>26</sup> asserted here, and relied on by the 13 Keene<sup>27</sup> and United Presbyterian Church courts), they have established a sufficient basis for 14 standing. Plaintiffs have done so here: their overseas communications fall squarely within the terms
15 of the policy, as described by the government, and Plaintiffs are obligated by very specific 16 professional ethical responsibilities to take countermeasures in response to the threat.
17
18
19 20
21

---

22 <sup>25</sup> See Allen v. Wright, 468 U.S. 737, 751-52 (1984) (“absence of precise definitions ... hardly leaves courts at 23 sea in applying the law of standing”).

24 <sup>26</sup> Judge Batchelder’s opinion also claims that to hold that “professional injury” can constitute the something
25 “more” (above and beyond a “subjective chill”) supposedly required by Laird demeans the First Amendment “as it
26 would effectively value commercial speech above political speech and protect the former and not the latter.” Slip Op.
27 at 13. This overlooks the particular nature of the professional activity at issue in this case and in the ACLU case: public 28 interest litigation. As Plaintiffs here have been careful to point out from the outset of this case, the First Amendment recognizes not just Plaintiffs’ expressive “interest in communicating with their clients” and others, but also “the important political and expressive nature of litigation” and “protects vigorous advocacy ... of lawful ends.” See Pls.
Opp. to MTD, Dkt. 56, at 4 (quoting Lehnert and NAACP v. Button). The professional injury suffered by Plaintiffs here is the equivalent of a restraint on political speech, and their interest deserving of the highest level of constitutional protection.

<sup>27</sup> See Meese v. Keene, 481 U.S. 465, 473 (1987).

1 B. Plaintiffs have established causation

2 The government argues that Plaintiffs’ communications with “al Qaeda suspects” cannot be
3 chilled by the existence of a program of warrantless surveillance because “any reasonable person”
4 would assume such conversations would be subject to surveillance by lawful means. See Gov’t
5 Suppl. Br. at 10 line 21.<sup>28</sup> Judge Batchelder agreed with this reasoning. But it is plainly wrong.

6 There is a substantial difference between the risks posed by wholly unregulated executive
7 surveillance, and the risk that one may be subjected to FISA surveillance. First, conversations
8 would be subject to FISA surveillance only if the government could produce the requisite probable
9 cause before a court. While the government claims several of our clients are al Qaeda members,<sup>29</sup>
10 the executive does not reach the statutory or constitutional threshold for probable cause by simply 11 claiming someone is a member of al Qaeda. It must adduce evidence before a court to do so.<sup>30</sup>

12
13 Second, and most importantly, under FISA surveillance schemes, “attorneys could trust 14 (and reassure their clients) that their privileged communications would remain confidential because 15 any information intercepted under the standard lawful procedures was subject to” judicially-16 supervised minimization requirements designed “to protect privileged information.” Pls. Opp. to 17 MTD, Dkt. 56, at 11; see also Pls. Reply in Suppt. of Summary Judgment, Dkt. 74, at 5. As Judge
18 Gilman put it, “[i]f the TSP did not exist, the attorney-plaintiffs would be protected by FISA’s
19 minimization procedures and would have no reason to cease telephone or email communications
20 with their international clients and contacts.” ACLU v. NSA (6th Cir. Jul. 6, 2007), Slip Op. at 50.

21
22
23

---

<sup>28</sup> Plaintiffs first responded to this argument in their Reply in Suppt. of Summary Judgment, Dkt. 74, at 5-6; see 24 also Oral Arg. Tr. at 16-18.

<sup>29</sup> See Oral Arg. Tr. at 16-18.

<sup>30</sup> And that, remarkably, is what it has failed to do in a large number of our clients’ cases. To use just one
25 example, the government contends that it need never produce before a federal court any evidence of criminal
26 wrongdoing on the part of CCR client Maher Arar in order to defeat his civil claims. Plaintiffs believe that the 27 government holds this position precisely because it cannot produce such evidence. The government has not rescinded 28 its claim that Arar is a member of al Qaeda, despite the fact that an exhaustive Canadian government commission of inquiry absolutely cleared him of any connection whatsoever with terrorism. No “reasonable person” would believe that probable cause could be adduced against Arar, yet the executive believes he would be a legitimate target for surveillance under the NSA Program.

1 So long as the threat of warrantless executive surveillance hangs over Plaintiffs' heads, that is no
2 longer the case.

3 The minimization provisions of FISA are specifically designed to protect privileged 4 communications, as Judge Gilman discusses in his dissenting opinion in ACLU v. NSA, Slip Op. at 5 43, 50-51. Plaintiffs aver that the minimization protections afforded by the statutory scheme, as 6 compared to a completely unregulated program conducted entirely at the whim of the executive 7 branch, are significant to them and their clients, and the government has offered no evidence to the 8 contrary. The fact that minimization requirements under statutory schemes serve to prevent 9 interception and retention of privileged communications is simply glossed over in Judge
10 Batchelder's opinion. See Slip Op. at 20.<sup>31</sup>

11
12 As to the related redressability element, Judge Batchelder claims:

13 The only way to redress the injury would be to enjoin all wiretaps, even those for 14 which warrants are issued and for which full prior notice is given to the parties
15 being tapped. Only then would the plaintiffs be relieved of their fear that their 16 contacts are likely under surveillance, the contacts be relieved of their fear of surveillance, and the parties be able to "freely engage in conversations and correspond via email without concern."

17 Slip Op. at 22. But that misses the point; an injunction against the NSA program would eliminate 18 Plaintiffs' well-founded fear of unlawful surveillance, and subject them only to the much less 19 substantial risk that they might be subjected to lawful, regulated surveillance, protected by judicial 20

---

21 <sup>31</sup> Judge Batchelder's opinion essentially argues that plaintiffs should take comfort from what they do not know
22 about the NSA Program. For instance, she states that plaintiffs have no basis "to presume that the information collected 23 by the NSA ... will be used or disclosed for any purpose other than national security," Slip Op. at 20, when government officials have asserted that NSA Program intelligence was utilized against terrorism-charge defendants Yassin Aref,
Mohammed Hossein, and Iyman Faris. See Lowell Bergman et al., *Spy Agency Data After Sept. 11 Led F.B.I. to Dead
Ends*, New York Times (Jan. 17, 2006).

24 She also claims that there is no indication that NSA is not "complying with, or even exceeding, FISA's"
25 minimization requirements. Slip Op. at 20; cf. Defs. MTD Reply, Dkt. 68, at 9. This of course misses the point that an 26 essential part of the protection provided by minimization requirements is the fact that they are judicially supervised and enforced. See Pls. Opp. to MTD, Dkt. 56, at 11-12, 11 n.8; Pls. SJ Reply, Dkt. 74, at 5. The government admits judges 27 are not involved at all in the Program; thus, by definition, meaningful minimization meeting constitutional standards is absent. Moreover, the Al Haramain case apparently centers on a document indicating surveillance of an attorney-client 28 communication, a fact widely reported by the press that belies the notion that minimization is applied by the Program.
That information was shared by NSA with OFAC, which accidentally disclosed it—something which refutes Judge Batchelder's notion that NSA may not be disclosing "information collected ... under the TSP to anyone for any purpose," Slip Op. at 21 n.31.

1 oversight and statutory minimization requirements.<sup>32</sup> To suggest that that is not a redressable injury
2 is to suggest that FISA serves no purpose in protecting privacy.

3 Similarly, Defendants claim that “any electronic surveillance that Plaintiffs are now
4 challenging is now being conducted subject to the approval of the FISA Court,” and thus “there is 5 no likelihood” that Plaintiffs claimed injuries will be redressed by the relief Plaintiffs seek. Gov’t
6 Suppl. Br. at 10 n.8. But as noted above, the government continues to assert a right to carry out
7 surveillance beyond that authorized by FISA, and it is that surveillance that Plaintiffs seek 8 protection from. It is well established that “a plaintiff satisfies the redressability requirement when 9 he shows that a favorable decision will relieve a discrete injury to himself. He need not show that a
10 favorable decision will relieve his every injury.” Larsen v. Valente, 456 U.S. 228, 243 n.15 (1982)
11 (emphasis in original) (quoted in Pls. Opp. to MTD, Dkt. 56, at 12-13).
12

13
14 In addition, Judge Batchelder appears to miss the distinction between the probable cause
15 requirement under FISA and the “reasonable basis” standard (described in Pls. Br. in Support of SJ, 16 Dkt. 6, at 8<sup>33</sup>) the administration claims it applies in the NSA Program:

17 the NSA is interested only in [intercepting those communications where] ... the 18 NSA has a “reasonable basis to conclude that one party to the communication is a 19 member of al Qaeda, affiliated with al Qaeda, or a member of an organization 20 affiliated with al Qaeda, or working in support of al Qaeda.” It is reasonable to 21 assume that the FISA Court would authorize the interception of this type of 22 communication, see 50 U.S.C. § 1805, and keeping this likelihood in mind, the 23 issuance of FISA warrants would not relieve any of the plaintiffs’ fears of being 24 overheard[.]

25 Slip Op. at 21. As we put it earlier, “[a] communication with an individual the executive merely 26 suspects of a link to terrorism, without evidence sufficient to reach the requisite threshold for

---

27 <sup>32</sup> Precisely because it is reasonable to fear lawless behavior, courts have generally recognized that the 28 unlawfulness of a challenged government practice bears substantial weight in assessing the reasonableness of plaintiffs’ fears in a chilling-effect standing analysis. See Pls. Opp. to MTD, Dkt. 56, at 9-10 (citing cases); contrast Laird.

<sup>33</sup> “NSA intercepts communications when the agency has, in its own judgment, merely a ‘reasonable basis to conclude that one party to the communication is a member of al Qaeda, affiliated with al Qaeda, or a member of an organization affiliated with al Qaeda, or working in support of al Qaeda.’” Pls. Br. in Support of SJ, Dkt. 6, at 8

1 cause, will not be subject to surveillance under FISA, but will be subject to surveillance under the 2 NSA Program.” Pls. Reply in Suppt. of Summary Judgment, at 5. Moreover, under FISA it is not
3 sufficient that “the NSA has” a basis for the belief that cause sufficient to justify surveillance
4 exists; an independent Article III judge must make the requisite finding—another obvious point
5 underlying the reasonableness of plaintiffs’ fears that is assumed away by Judge Batchelder’s
6 opinion.
7

8 To argue that court supervision of surveillance, the probable cause, limited duration and 9 minimization requirements, and the restrictions on use mandated by FISA are of no moment to 10 private callers is to ignore the very purpose of FISA in the first place: to protect private 11 communications from unconstrained government surveillance. No court can properly adopt these 12 conclusions as a matter of law. Indeed, they were soundly rejected by the Supreme Court as long 13 ago as Katz v. United States, 389 U.S. 347, 356-57 (1967):
14

15 It is apparent that the agents in this case acted with restraint. Yet the inescapable 16 fact is that this restraint was imposed by the agents themselves, not by a judicial 17 officer. They were not required, before commencing the search, to present their 18 estimate of probable cause for detached scrutiny by a neutral magistrate. They were 19 not compelled, during the conduct of the search itself, to observe precise limits
20 established in advance by a specific court order. Nor were they directed, after the 21 search had been completed, to notify the authorizing magistrate in detail of all that 22 had been seized. In the absence of such safeguards, this Court has never sustained a 23 search upon the sole ground that officers reasonably expected to find evidence of a 24 particular crime and voluntarily confined their activities to the least intrusive means 25 consistent with that end.

21 C. Fourth Amendment first principles further establish injury

22 Judges Batchelder and Gibbons’ analyses are also flawed as a conceptual matter because 23 they fail to consider the interests protected by the First and Fourth Amendments that Plaintiffs seek 24 to vindicate here. Judges Batchelder and Gibbons concluded that the ACLU plaintiffs lacked 25 standing because in the absence of proof that their own conversations had been subject to 26

---

27 (quoting Gonzales); see also id. at 8 n.25 (“NSA intercepts calls ‘we have a reasonable basis to believe involve Al
28 Qaida or one of its affiliates’” (quoting Michael Hayden))

1 surveillance, the plaintiffs could not establish a sufficient injury. This conclusion fundamentally
2 misapprehends the nature of the privacy protection provided by the Fourth Amendment and FISA,
3 particularly in the case of privileged communications. A proper understanding of the privacy
4 interests that are deserving of protection compels the conclusion that the Plaintiffs here (and for 5 that matter the ACLU plaintiffs as well) have standing to challenge the NSA Surveillance Program.
6

7         The framers drafted the Fourth Amendment to protect privacy for the benefits that insuring
8 a realm of private life brings. The development of personality that is possible when one is able to 9 live unobserved by government watchers and the exchange of ideas and emotions that is possible
10 when one can communicate with others without observation by government agents are examples of 11 these benefits. The benefits of protecting privileged communications are familiar to all lawyers.
12 The benefits accrue only where there is confidence that one's privacy is as protected as possible, as 13 inviolate as the Constitution and laws permit. The particularity requirement, for example, is 14 designed to limit government intrusions into private spaces (now understood to include 15 conversations) and to permit searching or surveillance of conversations only where evidence or 16 fruits of crime or unprivileged conversations with foreign agents will be discovered. Cognizant of 17 these limitations, a free person is entitled to confidence that private spaces and communications
18 that fall without the government's permitted zone of search and observation will remain private. In 19 the context of this case, a substantial objective risk that privileged conversations with attorneys will 20 be surveilled is sufficient to negate the benefits of the privilege.
21
22

23         This is why the scope of Fourth Amendment protections is based upon "reasonable 24 expectations of privacy," Katz v. United States, 389 U.S. 347 (1967). It is noteworthy that this 25 concept was first articulated in Katz, an electronic surveillance case. As the Court concluded in 26 that seminal opinion, "a person in a telephone booth may rely upon the protection of the Fourth 27 Amendment. One who occupies it, shuts the door behind him, and pays the toll that permits him to 28

1 place a call is surely entitled to assume that the words he utters into the mouthpiece will not be
2 broadcast to the world.” 389 U.S. at 352 (emphasis added). It is the ability to rely upon the 3 protection of the Fourth Amendment, to assume that one is not being overheard, that is significant,
4 because in the absence of that reliance, one cannot feel free to express private thoughts.
5

6 Judge Batchelder improperly assumes that the only cognizable injury that the Constitution
7 and FISA protects is the use of overheard conversations to cause additional harm to the 8 participants. See, e.g., Slip Op. at 9 n. 14 (“even if the NSA, unbeknownst to the plaintiffs, did 9 intercept a communication, there would be no tangible injury until the NSA disclosed the 10 information (presumably in a manner demonstrating a direct injury to the plaintiffs or their 11 contacts.”); id. at 13. This faulty analysis stems from thinking about the protections of the Fourth
12 Amendment primarily in the context of the exclusionary rule.<sup>34</sup> Judge Batchelder, for example,
13 argues that “traditional post-hoc remedies, such as the Exclusionary Rule or FISA’s civil suit 14 provision” would “adequately deter the use or dissemination” of information overheard during 15 surveillance, and thus suggests that this eliminates any injury. Slip Op. at 20. This argument seems 16 to suggest that only persons charged with crimes or who need to worry about the dissemination of 17 information obtained by the government would suffer an injury as a result of surveillance. On the 18 contrary, it is the very overhearing of the innocent conversation, the invasion of the privacy of the 19 homes and papers of innocent persons, that is the principal concern of the Fourth Amendment.
20
21 Judge Batchelder’s analysis assumes that absent dissemination or the taking of some other adverse 22

---

23 <sup>34</sup> It also ignores the scope of the duty of confidentiality imposed on attorneys. See, e.g., Affirmation of [Legal 24 Ethics Expert] Prof. Stephen Gillers, Dkt. 58, at ¶10:

25 It is no answer to say that suppression is available as a remedy for any improperly intercepted 26 communication. CCR and its clients may never know which communications may have been 27 intercepted. Intercepted communications may be exploited to the disadvantage of clients with no one 28 the wiser. In any event, whether intercepted communications are or are not ever used to the disadvantage of a client or otherwise is irrelevant. CCR has a duty to protect its clients’ secrets and confidences regardless of the use to which an interceptor may put the information. It is disclosure itself that is the evil against which lawyers must protect clients, regardless of any additional consequences of the disclosure.

1 action by the government against a person whose conversations have been subject to surveillance,
2 it is as though a tree fell in the forest with no one to hear it. But someone (the NSA) has heard it;
3 that is the initial harm caused by government surveillance—the intrusion on privacy. And the threat
4 of such overhearing is enough, in the case of the conversations at issue here, where the Plaintiffs 5 have ethical obligations to insure the privacy of communications, to destroy the value of the 6 privacy the conversations should be entitled to.
7

8 This error results in a misreading of the Supreme Court’s decision in Friends of the Earth,
9 Inc. v. Laidlaw Env’tl. Servs., Inc., 528 U.S. 167 (2000) by both Judges Batchelder and Gibbons.
10 Laidlaw involved a polluted river. The Court found that plaintiffs had standing to challenge the 11 pollution even though they were not using the river. The Court found that because the discharge of 12 pollutants into the river was ongoing, the plaintiffs might reasonably have curtailed their use of the 13 river in order to protect themselves from harm, and thus had standing to challenge the pollution.
14

15 Judge Batchelder takes from this that the plaintiffs in this case would have to prove that if 16 they engaged in international calls while the NSA Surveillance Program was in effect, they would 17 actually be overheard and would suffer some additional harm. As Judge Gilman points out,
18 however, the Supreme Court in Laidlaw did not require proof that plaintiffs “were all equally likely 19 to be affected by the pollutants, that the pollutants were evenly dispersed through the waterway, or 20 that a plaintiff swimming in the river was more likely than a plaintiff canoeing on the river to be 21 injured.” Slip Op. at 46. Indeed, we would add that the Court did not even require evidence that a 22 plaintiff entering the river would be harmed at all. It was merely the reasonable fear of harm if they 23 entered the river that gave the plaintiffs standing.
24

25 In this case the stream of international telecommunications is the “river.” Plaintiffs do not 26 feel free to enter this stream, to engage in international telecommunications with their clients,
27 witnesses and sources, because of a very reasonable fear of harm that if they do, their conversations 28

1 will be overheard. If that fear is reasonable—and under these facts it certainly is—that is all we
2 have to show to establish standing.

3 Judge Batchelder’s analysis is at its weakest when she argues that one can distinguish 4 between the harm that causes plaintiffs to refrain from international communications (the 5 consequences of being overheard) and the harm that results from refraining (the additional time and 6 expense required of plaintiff attorneys to competently represent their clients, or the diminution of 7 the quality of representation if they are unable to expend the additional resources necessary).
8 Because plaintiffs cannot prove that they have been overheard, she concludes that they cannot 9 establish the first type of harm. Judge Batchelder completely discounts the second type of harm as 10 an injury in fact because it is only “incidental” to the alleged wrong. Slip Op. at 9. No authority is 11 cited for this novel distinction. There is no doctrinal basis for rejecting as a relevant injury one that 12 a plaintiff foreseeably sustains as a result of steps he takes to avoid a harmful condition caused by 13 the defendant. That attorneys would avoid the stream of international communication with clients
14 and witnesses once it is “polluted” by government watchers is foreseeable, indeed ethically
15 required. The additional expense, or diminution in quality of representation, that results is not 16 “incidental,” whatever that may mean, but is proximately caused by the defendant’s wrongdoing
17 and certainly qualifies as an injury in fact.
18
19
20

21 D. Plaintiffs have shown the Program constitutes “electronic surveillance” under FISA

22 As to claims under FISA or its “exclusivity provision” (18 U.S.C. § 2511(2)(f)), Judge
23 Batchelder’s opinion argues that the ACLU plaintiffs “have not shown, and cannot show, that the 24 NSA engages in activities satisfying the statutory definition of ‘electronic surveillance’ [they] 25 cannot demonstrate that FISA does apply.” Slip Op. at 32.<sup>35</sup> She bases this conclusion on the 26

27
28

---

<sup>35</sup> See also Slip Op. at 29 (“These factors raise a host of intricate issues, such as whether the NSA’s wiretapping actually involves ‘electronic surveillance’ as defined in FISA...”).

1 notion that “[t]he present record ... contains three facts about the TSP”—which she identifies as
2 “the NSA (1) eavesdrops, (2) without warrants, (3) on international telephone and email
3 communications in which at least one of the parties is reasonably suspected of al Qaeda ties”—and 4 those three facts “offer[] no indication as to where the interception may occur or where any 5 surveillance device is located. Nor do[ they] offer any basis to conclude that particular people
6 located in the United States are being targeted.” Slip Op. at 31 n.40; id. at 6 (three facts).
7

8 Judge Batchelder’s argument is willfully blind to actual contents of the record. In both the 9 ACLU case and the instant case, the record contains the following admission by Attorney General
10 Gonzales:

11 Now, in terms of legal authorities, the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act 12 provides—requires a court order before engaging in this kind of surveillance that 13 I’ve just discussed and the President announced on Saturday, unless there is 14 somehow—there is—unless otherwise authorized by statute or by Congress. That’s 15 what the law requires.

16 Press Briefing by Attorney General Alberto Gonzales and General Michael Hayden, Principal
17 Deputy Director for National Intelligence, Dec. 19, 2005 (quoted in Pls. SJ Brief, Dkt. 5, at 9)<sup>36</sup>;
18 see also Oral Arg. Tr. at 84-85 (citing above). This is a clear admission, dating back to December 19 2005, that the surveillance carried out by the program was subject to the strictures of FISA—in 20 other words, that it constituted “electronic surveillance” under FISA § 1801(f).

21 In any event, in the context of the recent admissions concerning the January 10th FISA
22 orders and administration officials’ claims that those orders authorize surveillance of the same sorts
23 of communications as was carried out under the NSA Program, any claim that the Program did not
24 constitute “electronic surveillance” subject to FISA would be nonsensical given that the FISC’s
25 jurisdiction extends only to authorizing electronic surveillance.<sup>37</sup> See 50 U.S.C. §§ 1803(a) (FISC
26

27 <sup>36</sup> See also Press Briefing (“The President has authorized a program to engage in electronic surveillance”). The 28 press briefing transcript is included in the record as an exhibit to Goodman Aff., Dkt. 9.

<sup>37</sup> Cf. Slip Op. at 55-56 (Gilman, J. dissenting).

1 “shall have jurisdiction to hear applications for and grant orders approving electronic 2 surveillance”); 1804(a); 1805(a),(c),(e).

3 With respect to the merits, Plaintiffs reject Judge Batchelder’s plainly tortured
4 interpretation of the statutory exclusivity provisions, which properly understood require all
5 electronic surveillance to be conducted either under FISA or Title III. For the reasons that are well
6 presented in Judge Gilman’s dissenting opinion, Slip Op. at 55-56, it is clear that the statutory 7 limitation was intended by Congress to limit the government’s ability to conduct electronic 8 surveillance to the means provided in the statutes.
9

10 E. Plaintiffs’ APA claims are actionable

11 Judge Batchelder also ruled against the ACLU plaintiffs on their APA claims because she 12 held that there had been no “agency action” that could be challenged under 5 U.S.C. § 702. The 13 government has not made this argument and there is no basis in law for the conclusions reached by 14 Judge Batchelder. The only authority cited by Judge Batchelder, Norton v. S. Utah Wilderness
15 Alliance, 542 U.S. 55 (2004), does not control the present case. That case involved a claim under 5
16 U.S.C. § 706, for the failure of an agency to act, and the Court held that there was no action legally 17 required.
18

19 Norton relied upon Lujan v. National Wildlife Federation, 479 U.S. 871 (1990), for a 20 judicial interpretation of what constitutes “agency action,” which is defined by statute at 5 U.S.C.
21 551(13). Lujan makes clear that the present Plaintiffs have alleged agency action. In Lujan, the 22 Court held that the “land withdrawal review program” of the Interior Department did not constitute 23 “agency action” within the meaning of the statute. That description of a so-called program, 24 however, was a generic one that referred to the “continuing (and thus constantly changing)
25 operations of the BLM in reviewing withdrawal revocation applications and the classifications of 26 public lands and developing land use plans.” 497 U.S. at 890. Justice Scalia’s opinion for the 27
28

1 Court analogized the “land withdrawal review program” to a “weapons procurement program” for
2 the Defense Department or a “drug interdiction program” of the D.E.A., and concluded that it did
3 not refer to any identifiable agency action. Id. What the plaintiffs attempted to challenge in Lujan
4 was thus a much more amorphous collection of conduct than the very specific “Terrorist 5 Surveillance Program” at issue in this case. Contrary to the suggestion by Judge Batchelder, the 6 term Terrorist Surveillance Program was coined by the government and describes a very specific 7 program that NSA adopted pursuant to the direction of the President. (Gov’t. Suppl. Br. at 5;
8 Gov’t. Memorandum in Support of MTD, Dkt. 31, at 1-2). It is a discrete, circumscribed program
9 adopted for a specific purpose and constitutes “agency action” within the meaning of 5 U.S.C. §
10 702.<sup>38</sup>
11

13 CONCLUSION

14 For the foregoing reasons, and based on the arguments in our previous submissions,
15 Plaintiffs request that the Court deny Defendants’ Motion to Dismiss and grant Plaintiffs’ Motion
16 for Summary Judgment, issue a declaratory judgment holding the NSA Surveillance Program
17 unconstitutional and in violation of the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act, and enjoin 18 Defendants from engaging in any further surveillance without complying with the procedures of 19 the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act, or Title III where applicable.
20

21 Respectfully submitted,

22 /s/Shayana Kadidal

23 Shayana Kadidal
24 Michael Ratner
25 CENTER FOR CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHTS
26 666 Broadway, 7th Floor
27 New York, NY 10012-2317
28 (212) 614-6438

---

27 <sup>38</sup> As Justice Scalia noted in Lujan, a specific order or regulation applying to individual classification 28 determinations and withdrawal revocations would have constituted agency action. 479 U.S. at 890, n. 2. That is what the TSP is with respect to decisions to intercept communications.

1
2
3
4
5
6
7
8
9
10
11
12
13
14
15
16
17
18
19 20
21
22
23
24
25
26
27
28

David Cole
(CCR Cooperating Counsel)
c/o Georgetown University Law Center
600 New Jersey Avenue, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20001
(202) 662-9078

Michael Avery
J. Ashlee Albies
NATIONAL LAWYERS GUILD
c/o Suffolk Law School
120 Tremont Street
Boston, MA 02108
(617) 573-8551

Attorneys for Plaintiffs

July 9, 2007

1
2
3
4
5
6
7
8
9
10
11
12
13
14
15
16
17
18
19 20
21
22
23
24
25
26
27
28

Certificate of Service

I, Shayana Kadidal, certify that on July 9, 2007 (PDT), I caused the foregoing Memorandum to be filed electronically on the ECF system and served via email on the counsel for defendants listed below.

Anthony J. Coppolino
Special Litigation Counsel
United States Department of Justice
Civil Division, Federal Programs Branch
P.O. Box 883
Washington, D.C. 20044
Email: tony.coppolino@usdoj.gov

Dated: July 9, 2006

s/ Shayana Kadidal
Shayana Kadidal
CENTER FOR CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHTS
666 Broadway, 7th Floor
New York, NY 10012-2317